British Columbians got sales tax breaks on items ranging from B.C. Hydro and phone bills to gas-thrifty cars in a record $5.8 billion provincial budget brought down today by Finance Minister Hugh Curtis.

When all non-budgetary commitments are added in, government spending in the 1980-81 fiscal year will be well over the $6 billion mark.

The budget has a little bit of something for everyone, ranging from senior citizens and the handicapped to big and small business.

Credit for the budget largesse goes to the forestry and natural gas industries.

Government revenue in the 1979-80 fiscal year was $900 million higher than anticipated and more than two-thirds of that amount came from higher-than-expected income from lumber and natural gas.

The Denticare program due to start sometime this year has a $30 million appropriation.

"The cost of this program in a full year is expected to be substantially greater," Curtis said.

The budget shows the government is using the sales tax as its major weapon to fight the energy crunch.

The tax is lifted from all residential natural gas and electricity billing as of midnight tonight.

At the same time the one-half-cent-a-gallon fuel oil tax is repealed.

The sales tax drops to two per cent for new, fuel-efficient cars and rises to six per cent for gas-guzzlers.

Cars with mid-range fuel efficiency ratings will continue to be taxed at the general four per cent rate, as will recreation vehicles, vans, trucks, buses and all used vehicles.

And there are other incentives for energy conservation: sales tax exemptions for wood and coal-burning stoves, furnaces and fireplaces, multi-glazed windows and doors and certain equipment for solar heating systems.

The tax also comes off residential phone bills, patent medicines and used mobile homes.

And while the homeowner grant for most British Columbians remains unchanged, there is an increase of $50 in the grant given to the elderly, handicapped and war veterans, bringing it to $630.

Curtis includes a further sprinkling of tax relief in what he calls his "Spring ahead to the 80s" budget.

British Columbians, for example, will be allowed an income tax credit for shares purchased in registered corporations, starting in the 1980 taxation year.

Handicapped persons get a break on eligibility provision for gasoline tax rebates and the fee for probating wills is eliminated.

For big business, there is a new system of instalment payments for corporation capital tax and insurance premiums tax.

In addition, there are tax incentives for the mining industry to encourage more processing in B.C.

Small, independent mining operators will benefit from an increased exemption under the Mining Tax and Mineral Resource Tax Acts.

The government repeats its promise of legislation to permit creation of registered Small Business Venture Capital Corporations.

B.C. small businessmen also will be pleased by the announcement that the government will start paying interest on bills received that remain unpaid after 60 days.

Health care is front and centre in the budget.

More than one dollar in four has been allocated to the health ministry which forecasts expenditures totalling $1.55 billion.

This includes $100 million set aside for capital financing of hospital construction projects in the new fiscal year.

"Over the next five years the province will be continuing with the largest, mostly costly hospital construction program in B.C.'s history," Curtis said.

"Through this program 1,700 extended-care beds will be provided."

Bye-bye Maggie! Gov't stands firm, Elworthy fired

By MIKE HUGHES

The long-running saga of the Maggie came to a crunching conclusion today.

The fate of the Princess Marguerite was sealed as Arthur Elworthy was fired as president of the B.C. Steamship Co. Ltd., and the government reiterated the ferry will definitely not sail this summer.

In dumping the Marguerite once and for all, the government also rejected a petition with more than 39,000 names of people who asked that she be refitted to sail again this summer.

Elworthy emerged from a meeting at the Empress Hotel of the company's board of directors to say he was no longer wanted.

"I wasn't re-elected to the board," he said.

Asked how he viewed the decision, he replied:

"It's fine because it will be impossible to operate the Queen of Prince Rupert and I wouldn't want to be responsible for operating it."

Over the past two weeks, Elworthy has complained about the decision to replace the Marguerite on the summer run to Seattle with the smaller Queen of Prince Rupert.

He has also accused the government repeatedly of trying to violate his company's autonomy.

Another board member, Orval Cook, also resigned from the board after being reappointed at the meeting.

He said he quit because he didn't agree with the policy to cancel the Marguerite.

Also attending the meeting were Transport Minister Alex Fraser, Industry Minister Don Phillips and Victoria alderman Bob Wright.

Phillips said following the meeting that Fraser will be the new president of the B.C. Steamship Co. and David Price now with Tourism B.C.'s office in Seattle and formerly with the B.C. Ferry Corp. will be acting general manager.

Elworthy had previously held both positions.

Phillips refused to comment on Elworthy's firing, saying a press release was being prepared for later today.

As to the future of the Victoria-Seattle ferry operation, Phillips said that would be up to the new board of directors, including any decisions on auxiliary service.

In defence of the government's move to replace the Marguerite, Phillips said it was a question of safety.

"It is not going to be on my conscience to send babies and tourists on a vessel which is a disaster waiting to happen."

He said because of the Health care given big boost

The B.C. health ministry will construct additional hospital wards to provide 1,700 more extended care beds and 500 acute care beds over the next five years, the budget said.

In addition, the government will try to ease overcrowded conditions in hospitals by expanding its home service program.

The budget allows for $161.8 million for long-term care, up 25 per cent from the present fiscal year. A large portion of this money will be allocated for the home care program.

"The increased funding for home care will ensure provision of services in the home to prevent or delay expensive hospitalization," Finance Minister Curtis said.

In the 1980-81 fiscal year the ministry of health will receive $1.55 billion, an increase of $226 million over the forecast expenditure of the present year.

Of this amount, $345 million will go to the Medical Services Commission, up 21 per cent.

The government will make more than $750 million available for running of hospitals plus $100 million for hospital construction during the 1980-81 year.

"This government is concerned about the rate of increase in health costs and is determined to deal with this problem but not at the expense of jeopardizing our high level of services," Curtis said.

Expansion of the home care program would be an important step towards this goal, he said.

In addition the ministry will increase health promotion and education.

The budget allows for $39 million to be spent on encouraging responsible use of expensive medical services and the avoidance of unhealthy lifestyles.

City jobless hits 10.1%

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Victoria's unemployment rate rose by more than a full percentage point in February, bucking a trend set by the rest of B.C.

The seasonally-adjusted rate for the Victoria area reached 10.1 per cent, up 1.5 per cent from January, Statistics Canada reported today.

In the rest of British Columbia, the jobless rate dropped to 7.3 per cent down from a January high of 8.0.

Across the country, the number of persons unable to find work increased for the fifth month in a row to 949,000 in February, up from 946,000 the previous month.

But the number of unemployed is still below the level of 954,000 a year earlier.

The agency said the unemployment rate, adjusted for seasonal variations, was 7.4 per cent, the same as the January rate but below the rate of 7.8 in February, 1979.

The total labor force — which includes those working as well as those seeking work — rose in February to 11.18 million, a 3.4-per-cent increase from 10.81 million a year earlier.

Newfoundland continued to have the highest seasonally-adjusted jobless rate of 14.4 per cent, but it fell from 14.6 per cent a month earlier.

The biggest increase in the unemployment rate occurred in Manitoba where it climbed to 5.8 per cent last month from 4.8 per cent in January.

In Quebec, the rate increased to 9.8 per cent from 9.3 per cent and in both Saskatchewan and Alberta, the rate rose to 3.9 per cent from 3.8 per cent.

Economists and government officials have predicted higher national employment this year of eight per cent or more as the United States is expected to head for a recession, cutting demand for Canadian goods and the jobs needed to supply them.

No reprieve for hotel

The Glenshiel Hotel will be torn down and the land used as a government parking lot no matter how many protest signs the 60 elderly residents hang out of their windows.

However, Transport Minister Alex Fraser, the minister responsible for the building, says the two-year phase-out period might be extended if necessary.

"We're not going to stick to the actual 24 months, if it's going to cause problems. If they need 30 months they can have it," Fraser said Monday after meeting with a Glenshiel delegation.

It would cost more to repair the building than it is worth, Fraser said.

The B.C. Building Corp. estimates necessary repairs at $536,000 while evaluating the hotel at $420,000.

The government has given a commitment to spend about $150,000 on repairs necessary to keep the building in operation until alternate accommodation can be found for the residents.

The building was originally acquired by the previous NDP government as an addition to the legislative precinct and it is slated for use as a parking lot, he said.

Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson wrote to Fraser Monday suggesting he transfer responsibility for the old hotel to the health ministry which could maintain it as a residence for seniors.

"It is difficult to understand what planning mechanisms are in place in your government when the ministry cannot meet the needs of extended and long-term care beds for Victoria while your ministry will be doing away with 85 beds for seniors," Hanson stated in his letter.

Prime rate float branded 'subterfuge'

Times News Services

TORONTO — The Bank of Canada's decision to float its trend-setting bank rate came under immediate fire from economists and opposition critics today.

Many economists believe the decision is an attempt to blur responsibility for rising interest rates.

Douglas Peters, vice-president and chief economist of the Toronto Dominion Bank, said in an interview the bank's move is a "subterfuge" and another method of increasing rates.

Governor Gerald Bouey announced Monday the Bank of Canada will switch to a floating standard for its bank rate effective Thursday, whereby the rate will be fixed on each successive Thursday at one-quarter of one per cent more than the weekly rate established earlier that day for 91-day treasury bills.

The treasury bill rate has fluctuated in the range of 13.5 per cent and 13.75 per cent since early October.

"A floating rate does not mean a 'hands off' policy," Bouey said Monday.

"The Bank will continue to play an important role in the determination of short-term interest rates through its open-market operations and its management of the reserves of the banking system.

"But what does it mean?" said TD's Peters. "Little or nothing.

"It means bank rate changes will appear weekly on page 63 in your newspaper, instead of on page one every three weeks."

Montreal economist Dian Cohen said, "It means the government got itself out of the forecasting business,

"It takes the interest rate out of the political sphere.

"Maybe it means the Depression is here," she added. "The Americans are in miserable shape.

"In the next two weeks, watch for the bank rate to creep up closer to the 17 per cent in the U.S."

The Bank of Canada's rate is a record 14 per cent and chartered banks' prime rate to their most credit-worthy customers is 15 per cent. Banks in the U.S. are charging a prime rate of 17.75 per cent.

Opposition finance critics were hot off the mark in their criticism of the Bank of Canada decision.

"If the government thinks this means it can avoid responsibility for high interest rates, it's sadly mistaken," said New Democratic Party MP Bob Rae, his party's finance critic in the last Parliament.

Former Treasury Board president Sinclair Stevens called the move deceptive because it allows the new Liberal government to permit interest rates to rise without any political embarrassment.

"It's a neat, deceptive move," he said in a tele-

'Person 1' in every household

OTTAWA (CP) — When the census is taken next year, Canadians will be asked to choose "Person 1" in their household.

That person will be asked to answer questions about his or her relationship with other residents in the home who will become Person 2, Person 3, Person 4, etc.

Statistics Canada came up with the designations after being charged with sexism in the 1971 and 1976 censuses when it asked questions about the "head of the household."

The new designation is part of a cabinet order that was passed last month outlining 46 questions that some of the about 24 million Canadians will be required to answer in June, 1981, as Canada conducts its twice-a-decade head count.

Person 1 may be a husband or wife, either partner in a common-law relationship, or a parent living with unmarried children. If none of these apply, he-she may be any adult in the house.

Person 2 is the spouse of Person 1. Person 3 is an unmarried child. And so on.

Officials of the statistical agency say it is vital that the census include information on family relationships within households. Many federal, provincial and municipal programs, ranging from welfare to child tax credits, are based on that kind of information, they say.

The census will start June 2, 1981, and is expected to take about two months. The head count will be released in the second quarter of 1982, the agency estimates.

Next year, many of those questioned will have to answer questions dealing with mortgage or rent payments, the number of bathrooms in their homes, the kind of fuel used, income, religion, ethnic background, education, employment and more.

Duncan duo released

Two boys charged last Friday with attempting to hold up a bank in Duncan have been ordered to appear in family court on May 7.

The two, 12 and 15, were held in the Duncan RCMP lockup over the weekend and on Monday were released to the care of their parents.

Police said the boys entered the Bank of Montreal on Canada Way Friday morning and handed a clerk a note demanding money and threatening they had a gun.

The clerk hesitated the the pair ran out the door.

B.C. union wins round

OTTAWA (CP) — A union representing about 5,000 plumbers and pipefitters in British Columbia has scored a victory in a long court battle against wage limits under the federal government's now-dead anti-inflation program.

The Federal Court of Appeal has ruled in favor of the Burnaby Local 170 of the United Association of Journemen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada.

If the ruling is not appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, the 5,000 union members will receive an unestimated amount of back pay that has been held in trust pending the outcome of the battle, a government lawyer said Monday.

The ruling could be appealed by either the federal administrator of the Anti-Inflation Act or by the Construction Labor Relations Association of British Columbia, representing the majority of construction industry employers

An anti-inflation administrator spokesman said an appeal by the government agency is unlikely. A spokesman for the employers' association said the ruling has not been studied with legal counsel so any comment is premature.

Local 170 has been fighting since 1976 against the way the anti-inflation board imposed an eight-per-cent ceiling on wage increases for its members that year.

The dispute centres on whether Local 170 could be singled out from 28 union groups which simultaneously signed collective agreements in 1976 with the construction employers' association.

The anti-inflation board in 1976 recommended rollbacks in wage increases for all 28 groups, including Local 170, to $1.17 hourly from $1.26 hourly as negotiated in joint bargaining. The board also ordered separate increases and decreases in other benefits in some of the contracts.

The board recommendations were accepted by all parties except Local 170. The union expressed dissatisfaction to the board and argued that the eight-per-cent ceiling should be applied to Local 170's base wage rate alone.

Keating upgrade

Central Saanich council has approved in principle a plan to upgrade Keating Crossroad, the major east-west route across the municipality.

The plan, prepared by the municipal engineering department under the direction of Ald. Percy Lazarz, chairman of tghe works committee, calls for a widening of the road from two to five lanes and installation of curbs and sidewalks.

It would take four years to complete and cost about $1 million. Half would be paid by the provincial highways ministry.

Ald. George MacFarlane, who chaired Monday's meeting of council in the absence of Mayor Jean Butler, said today approval was subject to finding the necessary funding and obtaining school board co-operation. There are schools at either end of the road.

Canadian Pacific profit up 45% at $508 million

MONTREAL (UPC) — Canadian Pacific Ltd. announced Monday a 45 per cent jump in profits to over a half-billion dollars last year, led by strongly improved performances in its shipping, rail and investment divisions.

Over-all profits for 1979 totalled $508.1 million or $7.06 per common share, up from $349.8 million or $4.85 per share in 1978.

The strongest gain — a jump of $100 million to $334.5 million — was made by CP Investments, which enjoyed strong markets for the products of many of its resource and manufacturing activities, the company said.

The largest increases in the division came from metal mining, forest products and iron and steel.

CP Rail enjoyed a 13 per cent increase in revenues resulting from a record volume of freight and improved prices, hiking profits to $93.7 million from $63.5 million in 1978.

On the down side of the ledger, CP Trucks lost $1.9 million last year after a profit of $2.2 million in 1978.

CP Air earned only $13 million last year after a $20 million profit in 1978, despite a 17 per cent or $80.6 million increase in revenues.

Uranium probers given five additional months

B.C.'s one-man Royal Commission on Uranium Mining, headed by Dr. David Bates, has been given more time than Bates asked for to complere his study.

The Bennett government announced last month it had placed a seven-year freeze on uranium exploration and mining in the province and the Bates commission had until May 30 to complete its report.

Bates then requested an additional month or two to finish the job he had begun almost two years ago. Instead, he will get an additional five months, Energy Minister Bob McClelland announced Monday.

The minister said the extra time will allow the commission to hear more witnesses before being cut off.

"The government does recognize that in order to ensure the usefulness and validity of the teport that certain material not yet received by the commission, but in the process of being developed, should also be received," McClelland said.

The minister's decision is not entirely unselfish. One of the briefs yet to be submitted is that of the evergy ministry itself.

McClelland said he wanted the commission to have the advantage of receiving this material, "so the report can become a valuable documant, not only for the future of British Columbians but also as a reference tool for others who may need to grapple with the social, econimic, health and environmental issues raised in the handling of uranium mining and exploration."

All submissions must be presented to the commission by April 15.

Alberni Queen gets sea tests

The B.C. ferry Queen of Alberni, heavily damaged when she grounded on an Active Pass reef last Aug. 9, has been repaired and sea trials began today.

The Alberni, a fast vessel designed for overheight vehicles, is expected to return to her Tsawwassen-Swartz Bay run by Friday.

In the three days of sea trials, she will be put through every phase of operation, including compass and control adjustments, steering trials and full power runs.

Familiarization drills for the crew will include liferaft and fire drills.

Repairs included the rebuilding of her 18-ton gearbox in Germany.

Bennett ends debate

The throne speech debate — which at times threatened to degenerate into violence — came to a peaceful end Monday afternoon.

The final vote was 30-26, a full house in the legislature.

One reason for the comparatively quiet wind-up of the six-day debate was Premier Bill Bennett's lengthy closing speech which appeared to sedate the opposition to the point of insensibility.

Even the usual across-the-floor banter dwindled and died as the premier spent two hours repeating most of the Socred arguments used in the 1975 and 1979 election campaigns.

Bennett was one of the few speakers during the debate to actually deal with the throne speech.

Most of the NDP contribution dwelt on the Socred Dirty Tricks and other attendant issues and the bulk of the Socred response was designed to defend Bennett's leadership and the good name of Social Credit from the NDP attack.

At one point — last Wednesday night — hot tempers boiled over and members on both sides poured into the corridors to continue their debate on a nose-to-nose, curse-to-curse basis.

For a while it looked as if a full-scale donnybrook might break out but the members backed off and went muttering back to their seats.

The following day there was a further corridor confrontation.

Observers suggested the corridor dramas were just a government ploy, designed to keep the opposition off balance and the eyes of the media focussed on the fracas instead of on the debate.

One NDP member who did not speak in the throne speech debate was NDP leader Dave Barrett who is reported "saving himself" for the budget debate which opens Wednesday.

Allan Fotheringham

Why Grits sank in B.C.

VANCOUVER — The weekend before Pierre Trudeau's second-hand cabinet tramped up through the snow to Rideau Hall, bare-legged tennis here was absolutely smashing and, over the gin, a familiar smell wafted from the neighbors.

Yes, the nose was correct, the barbecue was out on the grass and the steak was sizzling.

On Feb. 23, the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club concluded its winter season and, now that the pussywillows and daffodils are out, the official spring and summer season got under way Sunday with an inter-club regatta off Kitsilano Beach.

The playing fields at the University of B.C. Saturday were speckled with strong-thighed young ladies bashing each others' shins with grass-hockey sticks.

What we have here, you see, is evidence of the Fotheringham climatology theory of politics, the reason why the Liberals are an extinct species on this mountainous frontier.

British Columbians, one must understand, have so much of everything that they have no need for representation in Ottawa. It does not bother them, it does not concern them and it puzzles them that outsiders fret so.

The climatology theory of politics also explains why central Canada, inflicted with those dreadful winters, is so eager always to be in the arms of the prevailing government.

The Liberal Party to an Ontarian is a womb-like entity, an earth mother that envelops all those chilly people in a warm, soothing embrace. If Canada were composed of unending summer the Tories or the Socialists might have a chance, but given a central Canadian winter the Liberals will prevail for centuries, dispensing largesse and patronage to the obedient voters as a mother gives milk.

There is the belief, widely held beyond the mountains, that the comfort of going through life without a winter is, if not un-Canadian, at least debilitating and encourages moral rot.

But then, Bud Grant, when coach of the Winnipeg Blue Bombers, as a rule refused to recruit football players from California, believing that products of such a sybaritic lifestyle could not possibly be tough mentally.

Grant still does not allow his Minnesota Vikings to have hand warmers or heaters on the bench, content in his belief that such luxuries were the start of the fall of Rome.

This general philosophy of flagellation — adhered to for years by the Scottish scrooges who developed our banking system and railways — is simply not on in B.C.

Why anyone would wish to rush to Ottawa in the first place is a local puzzlement that has never been answered. B. C. is one of the few provinces (PEI and Newfoundland being the only other ones) that has never produced a national political leader let alone a prime minister.

The man who came closest to the PM's chair was Jimmy Sinclair, Margaret's father, but that all ended when a dock collapsed in Russia breaking his back, and as a result he has had to take his wit to the Vancouver Club and enjoy B.C.'s non-winters.

It is perfectly fitting that the two men who do not understand the climatology theory, Lloyd Axworthy and Bob Bockstael, are both from Winnipeg with its famous 10 months of winter and two months hard sledding.

Their fabled expedition out here to find out what was wrong since no Liberals were elected was astonished to find that no one thought anything was wrong. The daffodils and the grass hockey girls had arrived, hadn't they? What could be amiss?

That this real secret to the mental processes of the B.C. voters has never penetrated to Liberal headquarters is quite mystifying. Especially since Mr. Trudeau, who wooed his bride out here, skis here (not to mention getting his teeth fixed.)

But he has never got a fix on the place. One supposes a man who feels he can level the Rockies or double-track trains with a sweep of a campaign promise would have difficulty understanding the other peculiarities of the place.

The Liberals, to win in B.C., have only one alternative: Cloud seeding.

McKitka stripped of council seat

SURREY (CP) — Former Surrey mayor Ed McKitka, convicted of seven criminal counts last week, was stripped of his council seat during a special Surrey council meeting Monday.

Present mayor Don Ross said McKitka has five days to appeal to a B.C. Supreme or county court judge to have council's resolution put aside pending his appeal on all seven convictions. Ross said that if McKitka does not appeal the disqualification, a byelection will be held in May.

The Municipal Act says that any person convicted of a criminal offence is ineligible to sit on council for at least five years after his sentence is served but Ross pointed out that the appeals could last until the fall, allowing McKitka to remain on council until his term expires in November.

Ross refused to give details of how aldermen voted at the in-camera meeting.

"It is a sad and trying time for the municipality, that we had to make such a decision," he said.

Oily questions

Even before Newfoundland has reached agreement with the federal government over who has jurisdiction over undersea resources, the province could find its battleground spreading to the international scene. While Premier Brian Peckford is insisting that Ottawa grant Newfoundland the same control of offshore oil as is constitutionally guaranteed to land-locked provinces for underground resources , Third World countries are looking for a piece of Newfoundland's action.

Brian Flemming, a Canadian expert on the International Law of the Sea Conference, says a major issue yet to be sorted out by the United Nations group is the belief by some countries that offshore resources located more than 200 nautical miles from a country's shore, but within its continental margin should be linked to the international doctrine of the commom heritage of mankind.

The doctrine that has evolved over the past 20 years ago states that anything not within the specified jurisdiction of a coastal state should be shared with poor land-locked nations or those with little coastline. However, another agreement signed in 1958 gave coastal states the right to exploit offshore resources to a depth of 200 meters, which at that time was as deep as the work could be done.

As a result of these agreements made at Law of the Sea Conferences, a few Third World countries are watching carefully resource development off Canada's east coast. The Hibernia oil well is just four miles inside the 200-mile limit and the Ben Nevis well is just beyond. Speculation has it that many millions of barrels of oil worth billions of dollars lie beneath the continential shelf up to 400 miles off the coast of Newfoundland.

A majority of the nations represented at Law of the Sea negotiations wants a share of any resource exploitation that takes place beyond Canada's 200-mile limit. Canada can argue that since the Continental Shelf is generally less than 200 meters deep, it can legally take resources to the edge of the shelf. However, one Canadian negotiator believes the country has little chance of gaining recognition for claims beyond 200 miles unless it agrees to some form of revenue sharing.

Newfoundland, predictably, has reacted to the prospect of sharing resources with Third World countries with anguish equal to the thought of sharing with the rest of Canada. One senior provincial bureaucrat says the notion of linking resources on the continental shelf with a common heritage is "heresy."

So far, the Continental Shelf off Newfoundland is the only place in the world where oil has been found more than 200 miles offshore but at a depth less than 200 meters. Until negotiations or court rulings cause some change, Ottawa has jurisdiction over offshore resources. But it is somehow ironic that Canada's have-not province is the region of Canada that may be obliged to share with have-not countries.

Death of the hawkers

On Thursday Victoria city council will, if all goes according to plan, officially proclaim the death of fast-food hawkers on the Inner Harbor causeway. Council will remove from the books the bylaw it passed two years ago to allow the sale of sausages, popcorn, ice-cream and the like from carts on the causeway. It's a pity.

When the 1978 council voted to allow hawkers, it had two aims: to provide a handy, light-snack service for the Inner Harbor tourists and to provide an opportunity for students and young people to earn some summer money by setting up their own carts. Both remain worthwhile goals.

Yet the hawkers really have no one to blame but themselves for council's action this year. They were detracting from the pleasant tourist atmosphere of the Causeway, not enhancing it. The health department was disturbed about the low level of sanitation and food-handling practices of some of the operators. The carts were uninspiring in design and color; in 1979, a large number of them were decorated only with gaudy umbrellas advertising soft drink brands.

They were causing a litter problem. In 1978, the operators tried to find ways of helping clean up the litter, but last year there was no evidence they put forth much effort.

Moreover, the carts were not providing the sort of employment opportunities that had been envisioned. Although carts could be officially licensed only by owner-operators, a couple of small monopolies were gathering control of most of them, using ill-paid employees to take out licences.

And the carts were proliferating. The city could not find a legal way to limit their number or to confine them to certain spots along the sidewalk.

All in all, the benefits were not worth the problems that the cart operators were creating. Hence, the proposal to council to abandon the whole idea.

It's a shame. A few well-decorated carts, with the operators in Victorian costume selling high-class snack food could provide a useful service and a colorful addition to the Causeway.

Democrats aid opposition

TAMPA, Fla. — In the five-day stretch between today, and Sunday, March 16, President Carter has an excellent chance to win four primaries in Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Puerto Rico, and seven state Democratic caucuses in Alaska, Hawaii, Oklahoma, Washington, Delaware, Mississippi and South Carolina.

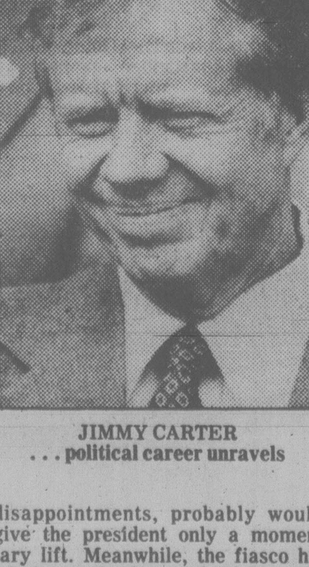
If that happens, could the president's challenger, Sen. Edward Kennedy, conceivably recover from such an onslaught, even if he were to pull together his disorganized campaign in Illinois and eke out a victory in that state's important primary on March 18? The most devoted Teddy fan would have to concede that it's unlikely he could — even though there are good reasons to believe that Carter, after three months of virtual immunity from criticism, is beginning to be seen again as indecisive, incompetent and uninspiring.

Kennedy sags

The problem is that Kennedy has proved to be a weak challenger, all but fatally undermined by public distrust — a point well made by one damning statistic from Florida, where by all accounts Carter should roll up an impressive victory in today's primary. In a poll taken for four leading state newspapers last Jan. 25-29, Kennedy was viewed unfavorably by a staggering 66 percent of all the 1,207 Floridians sampled; by contrast, even John B. Connally Jr. was seen unfavorably by only 53 percent of the respondents, while Carter got a "favorable" rating from 73 percent of those queried.

That statistic points to the single most important fact in the Democratic race to date — that even if Carter the president, as seems likely, rapidly declines in public esteem, Carter the candidate is unlikely to be defeated by a challenger who evokes the unfavorable public reaction Kennedy does, or by Governor Brown of California, who has not caught on anywhere.

Carter's political position, invulnerable since the hostages were seized in Iran more than three months ago, is beginning to unravel like a ball of twine. The United Nations commission sent to Tehran with Carter's blessing and in the expectation that its work would result in the release of the hostages, turned out to be futile; the war scare Carter set off in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan is abating, as shown by congressional resistance to his draft registration proposals; and the allies plainly are dragging their feet in response to his leadership on such issues as the boycott of the Moscow Olympics.



JIMMY CARTER
. . . political career unravels

Even the release of the hostages, after so long a time and so many disappointments, probably would give the president only a momentary lift. Meanwhile, the fiasco his administration has made of the economy is becoming glaringly apparent, as is the futility of his belatedly launched budget-balancing drive. Perhaps worse, Carter's incredibly inept performance on the U.N. resolution condemning Israeli settlement policy not only endangered his support in the Jewish community but revived the "competence" issue that brought him so low in the polls last year.

But if the public's unfavorable view of Kennedy means that he cannot take advantage of Carter's again-visible weaknesses, are the Democrats going to let that advantage go to the Republicans by default? It now appears so, owing to the fact that the party has, on the one hand, an incumbent president, and on the other a challenger long assumed to be the rightful and overpowering heir to party leadership, so that no other contenders have raised their heads.

The Henry Jackson-Ben Wattenberg-Commentary magazine Democrats — or neo-conservatives — have made no effort this year to put forward a candidate, although their most articulate colleague, Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan of New York, might be able to rally much support for a harder-line foreign policy. A dearth of big-state Democratic governors, together with the candidacy of Jerry Brown, no doubt has prevented the emergence of another candidate — like New York's Hugh Carey — from outside Washington.

Left-wing Democrats formed behind Kennedy too soon and too solidly, in blithe disregard of weaknesses they might well have foreseen. Now, too many of them are deserting across party lines to support the attractive liberal Republican, John Anderson of Illinois; but that is no substitute for pushing for, say, Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona to resume the race he ran so spiritedly in 1976. And what of Sen. Adlai Stevenson of Illinois, who at one time was making presidential noises?

Of course it's late for another challenger to emerge — as late as it is for the Gerald Ford draft movement now being mounted by some Republicans. Maybe Kennedy can yet build a winning campaign out of victories in Illinois and New York. But given Carter's precarious position, the unfavorable public reaction that dogs Kennedy, and Brown's floundering campaign, it seems remarkable that the Democratic Party should make no other effort to save itself from a Republican victory, at worst, or four more years of Jimmy Carter, at best.

Nurse support

While it is appropriate that settlement of the nursing pay dispute is made at the bargaining table, I'm writing to support the nurses' claim that they deserve a considerable increase in salary. Working alongside the nurses in our community hospitals has been a satisfying and challenging experience. Our nurses are highly trained and have brought their skills into our overcrowded hospitals for the benefit of sick people. As very important team members they have made it possible for the hospital to bring the advances in medicine and surgery to our city.

The news that wages of registered nurses are little more than those of licenced practical nurses and hospital orderlies must come as a shock to all patients, their relatives and others who work in hospitals. I hope that all citizens will want our province to recognize the true worth of registered nurses. A substantial increase in nurses' salary would be a bargain for the sick people of British Columbia. — Dr. George M. Woodwark, Western Cardiology Associates.

Launder policies

I wish to comment on the story which appeared in the Feb. 25 Victoria Times, concerning Gordon's Towing.

When will the rest of the business community in Victoria collect its weight and pressure the city fathers to do something? One hears, too numerously, accounts of blatant disregard for courtesy directed toward the operators and staff. Our city is so concerned about attracting tourists to bring along their American dollars, yet they do nothing about one company which is prompting some of these visitors to return home and place ads in their local newspapers discouraging others from visiting here.

Since our area is so dependent on tourism, perhaps offending businesses and also, it would appear, the police department, should launder their policies concerning politeness and courtesy toward our American friends on whom the economic stability of this city so greatly depends. — L. Matte, RR #3, Victoria.

Unity needed

The Canadian premiers wish to participate more directly in the federal government decision-making and patronage in the name of general decentralization. Why is it assumed that provincial premiers have the constitutional right to speak for their provinces on matters wholly within federal jurisdiction and competence? What does that do to the prior constitutional rights of members of Parliament elected from any province for that very purpose? It certainly erodes their power and, if carried to extreme, might even make parliament unnecessary.

The growing assertion that we now have 11 co-equal governments rather than one senior and 10 junior makes a sham of any attempt to be a nation. Some time ago Premier Lougheed even went so far as to deny that Pierre Trudeau could speak for Canada. At least the PM speaks with one voice and not ten!

About our own Bill Bennett, too, is the suspicion that he does not fully understand our union and that his proposed reforms are definitely parochial. Our union needs to be strenghtened, not weakened, especially now with the country facing both economic malaise and threatened disunity.

I sometimes wonder how our premier would feel if it became necessary for him to consult with the mayors of our 10 leading municipalities before bringing forward new legislation. Not only that but having to get their unanimous consent before B.C.'s constitution could be amended! To ask such questions is to indicate how silly it all is. But is it any sillier than to require the federal government to do the same thing with regard to the provinces? In the opening paragraph of the BNA Act it speaks of Canada "with a constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom". Has anyone ever heard of the British Parliament putting up with such nonsense? — F. L. P. Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Bay Road.

Erect sign

Tourists coming into our city via Seymour Avenue come to the junction of Saanich Road and looking across the road see a huge chunk of rock with no indication of which way to get to the heart of Victoria.

I pointed this out to a member of the Downtown Merchants Association and suggested that a huge sign be put up giving directions of the various attractions to our downtown area. This I was told was not possible due to Saanich council's refusal to allow such a sign.

Surely this must be pretty stupid, and a complete lack of co-operation between our municipalities seems to prevail. After all, our tourists spend money in Victoria and all its offshoots, so why not get together and help them, not confuse them when they get off the highway. — Griff Owens, 31-880 Vernon Avenue.

Means test

Perhaps one should be made aware of just how "poor" our senior citizens really are in Victoria, as per a letter from G. A. Milton regarding the bus passes of our senior sector. If the senior citizen of this city should be allowed "next to nothing" fares, what about others who cannot afford to ride the buses but must pay full fare? Also, one cannot put the riders of the buses into the three groups as Milton has done — "senior (poor), single mothers and their children (poor), and school-aged children (can't drive)". What about workers, middle class, etc.? I happen to agree with James Campbell on his proposal of taking away bus passes for seniors.

I know of many senior citizens here in Victoria who can't afford the bus fares but seem to swing the money for six months in Hawaii and California every year. What about recreational facilities available to these seniors as well, while our younger people have none of these, or very little. If the senior citizens must have their bus passes, why not have them go through a "means test"? — N. L. Welch, 50 Menzies Street.

Railways need innovation

Mr. Lawless, the new CN Rail President, has questioned the accuracy of my observations on the condition of Canadian railways ("The National Nightmare", Canadian Weekend, Feb. 9). I wrote that "In terms of traffic carried, there were twice as many derailments in 1977 as in 1960" and that "there were two to three times as many derailments in Canada in 1976 . . . as in France, West Germany, Switzerland, Poland and Japan". These statements reflect the following data from reports of the Canadian Transport Commission, the Railway Transport Annuals of Statistics Canada and International Railway Statistics:

In Canada:	Year	1960	1977
	No. of derailments	92	316
	Traffic (billion gross ton-miles)	169	291
	No. of derailments per billion gross ton-miles	0.54	1.09

In 1976, the numbers of derailments per billion gross ton-miles were as follows: Canada, 1.07; France, 0.42; W. Germany, 0.34; Switzerland, 0.44; Poland, 0.39; Japan, 0.32.

Clearly, the number of derailments in Canada doubled between 1960 and 1977 in relation to traffic in gross ton-miles, "the accepted railway statistic", and in 1976, was two to three times higher than in the countries listed.

From 1958 to 1962, the average number of derailments in Canada was 101 per year; between 1972 and 1978, it was 325. This large increase must be of concern to all communities located close to tracks. So must be the evidence of the Mississauga inquiry which showed that, before the doomed train derailed, it travelled 1½ miles after losing a set of wheels. Had the cars been equipped with derailment and dragging equipment detectors, this and other multi-car derailments could have been prevented.

Unpublished statistics on "accidents of all kinds", "even the most trivial", quoted by Mr. Lawless, show a three-fold decrease in CN's overall accident rate between 1972 and 1979. This excellent performance by CN has not been reflected in the rate of non-trivial accidents which determine the level of safety. As noted, the frequency of significant derailments and other serious accidents (which, by law, are reported to the CTC) has stayed at a high level.

It takes more than a statement by the Chief Executive to establish that CN Rail is "fast, efficient and safe". These are not absolutes. (The average speed of CN freight trains decreased from 38 km/h in 1971 to 36.8 km/h in 1977; is this "fast?") As reported in my article, comparisons with more modern systems indicate that there is considerable scope for improvement. Even if "CN Rail's track and equipment are in the best condition in the company's history", as Mr. Lawless claims, they are still obsolete relative to current state-of-the-art abroad.

Innovation is needed on all levels. Since 1960, railways have been electrifying, except in North America, at a rate of 4300 km/year; Australia is the latest member of the club. But innovation is not, as yet, on CN books. What one finds instead are quite extraordinary proposals: while Mr. Lawless envisages return to steam before electrification (The Globe and Mail, January 31, 1980), Mr. Trudeau (January 17, 1980) wants to double-track CN (or was it merely electioneering double-talk?) from Winnipeg to the Pacific. Such is the sorry state of railway politics in Canada today.

Before electrification and general modernization of Canadian railways can start, innovation in the financing of railways is necessary. — Julius Lukasiewicz, Professor, Mechanical and Aeronautical Engineering, Carleton University.

Agent Orange: Frightening legacy of war leads to Viet vets' lawsuit

By JOYCE EGGINTON
London Observer

NEW YORK — For many of the Americans who fought in it, the Vietnam war may not be over. More than 10 years after the event, the use of chemical defoliants upon millions of acres of Vietnamese countryside is alleged to be bringing death and destruction to thousands of young Americans who thought they were survivors.

Some have recently died of cancer. Others have crippling malignancies. Many more have a variety of stubborn medical conditions of a type associated with exposure to dioxin — a highly toxic chemical which was present in "Agent Orange", the defoliant most widely used by the U.S. military. Even more alarming, some American ex-servicemen have fathered children who, in medical terms, are monsters.

Some of these infants resemble "thalidomide babies," in whom eyes or ears have never formed, and limbs are grossly shortened or entirely missing. Others have been born with internal organs outside the body, or with organs lacking or duplicating.

About 500 veterans of the Vietnam war have filed suit against the American chemical companies which supplied Agent Orange to the U.S. military: Dow Chemical Company, the Monsanto Company, Hercules Inc., Diamond Shamrock Corporation and North American Phillips Corporation.

They are demanding that these companies set up a multi-billion dollar trust to cover the cost of medical treatment and disability pensions, not only for themselves and their dependents, but also for all other ex-servicemen and their children who may suffer future health damage from past exposure to Agent Orange.

The lawsuit is being left open so that others may join as the case proceeds. Victor Yannacone, the Long Island attorney who heads a consortium of 12 law firms representing the plaintiffs, believes there are several hundreds more Agent Orange cases which could be filed now, and that 2.4 million Vietnam veterans are at risk.

A New York federal judge has already cut through a lot of red tape by ruling that all the cases may be consolidated in his court, and the trial is expected to begin within a year.

It is the veterans' contention that the chemical companies knew of the hazards of Agent Orange but, in their eagerness for the Vietnam contracts, did not warn the U.S. military authorities and did not take time to develop a herbicide which was relatively safe. The military borrowed the idea from the British, who used a chemical known as 2,4,5-T to clear supply routes in Malaysia.

Agent Orange — orange because of the color-coding on the drums in which it was packed — was a 50-50 mixture of 2,4,5-T and 2,4-D, both of which have been in civilian use for years as weed-killers.

Absolute purity in such chemicals, especially when manufactured on a huge scale, is elusive. It is virtually impossible to produce 2,4,5-T without also creating very small quantities of a dioxin known as TCDD. This is the most toxic of all man-made chemicals — the same kind of dioxin which was spewed by a leaking reactor over the Italian town of Seveso in July, 1976.

"During the war, when Dow and Monsanto were turning out large quantities of Agent Orange, no one made much effort to keep out the dioxin," according to Yannacone. "The air force was demanding quantity, not quality control."

Defoliant disabilities showing up a decade later

This suit does not include the military authorities. It cannot. Thirty years ago the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that men who had served in the forces may not sue the U.S. government for injuries sustained by the negligence of military authorities when they were on active service.

The chemical companies deny liability. In a counter-suit, Dow Chemical (the leading supplier of Agent Orange to the military) has accused the U.S. government of misusing the defoliant in Vietnam. Dow contends that federal authorities should have known the risks involved, and alleges that it was prevented from putting warning labels on the drums which went to Vietnam.

Wherever the blame lies, the decision to defoliate vast tracts of Vietnam is having repercussions beyond anyone's imagining at the time. Many of the men whose health has been damaged or whose children are defective have only just begun to make the link between their exposure to Agent Orange and what started happening in their bodies several years later.

About 100, living in the New York area, met for the first time recently at a Saturday afternoon rally in a Long Island church hall. Many brought their wives and children — youngsters who included a toddler who was born without a gullet, a baby girl with hands growing directly from her shoulders, and a surprisingly happy nine-year-old named Kerry Ryan who has spent most of her life having corrective surgery.

She was born more than two years after her father, Michael Ryan, returned from the war. "Kerry was injured on the battlefield with me," he insists. "If I had not been exposed to Agent Orange she would have been okay." both Michael and his wife Maureen came from large families with no history of birth defects.

Kerry had 18, including the absence of a rectum, a large hole in the heart, duplicate reproduction organs and malformation of one arm. She was blind for two years and cannot walk. Her father's alleged exposure to Agent Orange had less obvious effects — severe weight loss, some apparent liver damage, frequent migraines and a persistent and debilitating skin complaint known as chloracne, the most frequent symptom of dioxin poisoning.

The bizarre multiplication of effects caused many young couples at the meeting to wonder aloud whether Agent Orange could cause genetic damage which might not only affect their children put persist into successive generations.

"Suppose Kerry had been normal," Maureen Ryan conjectured. "From what I now know about dioxin — how it can change the structure of genes — the problems which we now see in her could appear, instead, in her children."

It was a chilling thought. "Dioxin is one of the chemicals which interferes with DNA," Victor Yannacone told the meeting. "It is something which all those of you of childbearing age must be aware of."

An ugly solution to this problem has presented itself to a few Vietnam veterans. One young man stated that he had recently had surgery for testicular cancer: "I suffered castration because of my exposure to Agent Orange."

More common symptoms are chloracne, liver damage, neurosis, dramatic weight loss, numbness of the hands and feet, gastro-intestinal problems and sexual impairment. Most of these conditions have appeared in the veterans some time after expsorue to Agent Orange, and the cancers have taken at least 10 years to develop.

The Veterans Administration, which operates hospitals for ex-servicemen throughout the U.S., has been reluctant to acknowledge that any of these symptoms are related to exposure to Agent Orange. The men are bitter about this, since it means a lack of proper treatment and, in most cases, the denial of disability payments or survivors' benefits, in case of their deaths.

For the VA's part none of its staff members seems to have been aware of Agent Orange contamination until quite recently. The first one to suspect it was a case worker in Chicago, Maude De Victor, who interviewed a tearful widow in July, 1977.

A formerly healthy man, he had told his wife: "If ever I get cancer it's from those chemicals we used in Vietnam." She did not know what chemicals he had been talking about, but related the remark to Mrs. De Victor, who was sufficiently intrigued to do some research of her own.

She found out about the dioxin in Agent Orange, and how it was a known cancer agent. "These Vietnam veterans aren't exaggerating when they say they ave been poisoned," she told her superiors. Few believed her. She was removed from casework and, she maintains, has had her mail intercepted and her telephone tapped.

The Veterans Administration has had 5,000 complaints of Agent Orange-related disease but has made only a few disability awards.

If the veterans prove their case in court, the implications for the U.S. goverment will extend beyond its own citizens to an unknown number of victims in Vietnam. America's use of defoliants from 1962 to 1970 was the most controversial aspect of the war, justified by the Pentagon on the grounds that it was necessary to reduce the Viet Cong's jungle cover. As time went on, there were persistent reports that U.S. planes were also spraying rice crops and that innocent peasants were starving.

After bitter criticisms at the United Nations, the American Academy for the Advancement of Science sent some of its own independent experts to Vietnam to investigate. Their reports of devastating damage to the ecology was shortly followed by the U.S. government's decision to end defoliation.

Even so, the AAAS experts had only a glimpse of the human problem. They reported being told of miscarriages and birth defects among Vietnamese, but since practically no statistics were kept in the rural areas it was impossible to tell whether this reported increase was significant, or even correct. The scientists' report concentrated on visible damage to the land.

Several years passed before it was realized that perhaps some of the U.S. air crews had been on spraying missions might also have been affected by Agent Orange. Now it is emerging that every American who fought in Vietnam (not to mention Vietnamese) may have risked exposure.

Most of the plaintiffs in the suit against the chemical companies were infantry soldiers who camped and fought in areas which had been cleared by the defoliants. Some have no recollection of being sprayed. "The air crews could go back to base after a flying mission and take a shower," said one. "We didn't change our clothes for days, and drank from streams which had been contaminated by the chemicals."

The plaintiffs have formed an organization, Agent Orange Victims International, with a rapidly growing membership. Its president, Frank McCarthy, is touring the U.S. on what he calls "the last search and destroy mission" — gathering names of affected Vietnam veterans to add to the list of plaintiffs.

"In 12 years of combat in Vietnam the U.S. had 57,002 men killed," McCarthy says. "We believe there are as many veterans suffering from chronic toxicity as the result of exposure to Agent Orange, plus about 350,000 with minor symptoms. There are 5,000 cases of cancer alone."

All the men in Yannacone's suit insist that they were not warned of Agent Orange's toxicity. A 1966 handout given to U.S. airmen who took part in the spraying missions states: "The sprayed chemical is non-toxic to human or animal life."

"For some time I was in a reconnaissance platoon, working in extremely dense jungle that was infested by the enemy," Frank McCarthy recalls. "When the defoliation mission came along I was glad to see them. I thought of the chemicals as just another part of military equipment. If I had known then what I know now I would have probably shot at our own planes."

Tracy Leden, a former aircraft mechanic, told how he helped to load aircraft tanks with Agent Orange. "We would pump it in from 55-gallon drums and the Vietnamese would help us. Some of it would splash in our faces. If we got our shoes soaked with it, they would turn to mush in no time. I was only 19, and it never dawned on me that the stuff could be dangerous."

Eight years later, back in civilian life, Leden developed an ugly rash, numbness in his legs and small growths all over his body. "It took me almost two years to connect these health problems with my exposure to Agent Orange," he said.

Information about the effects upon the Vietnamese is sketchy. Dr. Tom That Tung, North Vietnam's vice-minister for health during the war years, recently visited the United States and reported an apparent increase in liver cancer, birth defects, and miscarriages among Vietnamese who inhabited the sprayed areas.

"We also have chloracne in just the same way as the Italian children in Seveso," he said. But, again, there have been no widespread studies of the population and there are no reliable statistics.

Many of the veterans express compassion for the Vietnamese who were harmed. "If Kerry had been born in Vietnam, she would have been dead within 48 hours," said Michael Ryan. "I don't know if we can do anything about the people still suffering out there, but we must try. It's our moral obligation."

Aussie victims join suit

NEW YORK — Australian veterans of the Vietnam war are starting to join the legal action by several hundred American ex-servicemen claiming compensation for health and genetic damage allegedly caused by exposure to defoliants such as Agent Orange.

William McMillan, a Brisbane lawyer, flew to New York last week to add 40 Australian names to the growing list of plaintiffs against five U.S. chemical manufacturers. He is preparing another 600 Australian claims and will return to the U.S. to file them in a few weeks.

Symptoms appearing among Australians are similar to, and often worse than, those of American veterans. Several years after exposure, some are developing cancer and neurological damage and fathering children with a high incidence of birth defects.

The Australian plaintiffs include three brothers who served in the war and fathered 11 children between them. The oldest child, born before the war, was normal. The other 10, born after their fathers' return from Vietnam, had gross deformities, McMillan said.

The wife of another of his clients had five successive miscarriages. Her sixth pregnancy resulted in a baby with multiple birth defects. "Australian doctors tell us that they have never before seen some of these deformities," McMillan said.

"There are children born blind because they have no irises to their eyes; children with extra fingers, and yet no knuckles. At the same time we have young men who have never smoked a cigarette dying of lung cancer."

Most of the 40,000 Australian servicemen in Vietnam from 1967 to 1971 served in one area. There, according to McMillan, they were exposed not only to Agent Orange - the chemical which the U.S. military sprayed over thousands of acres of Vietnamese countryside - but also to Agent Blue, which was used on rice paddies.

The Australians contend that the combined effect of these two agents has been more devastating than those of Agent Orange alone.

It took the Australians even longer than the Americans to realize that their health and their children's birth defects might be connected with their exposure to the chemical, but in the last few weeks a nationwide organization of Australian victims has been formed, and is growing rapidly.

Sales tax break given for fuel efficient cars

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Your new vehicle will have to get at least 33 miles per gallon to qualify for the new low sales tax on fuel-efficient cars.

The B.C. government will use the 1980 federal transport department's Fuel Consumption Guide to determine who gets a tax break and who gets hit with a penalty for excessive gas consumption.

Cars which can go 33 miles or more on a gallon of gas — or in metric terms, 100 kilometres on 8.5 litres of gas or less — will be taxed at only two per cent.

Guzzlers which get less than 22 miles per gallon — or use 13 or more litres to go 100 kilometres — will be taxed six per cent.

The sales tax of four per cent will remain unchanged on vehicles in the middle.

The variable sales tax also will not apply to four-wheel drive jeeps and trucks, light pickups, vans and recreation vehicles.

Other initiatives in conservation and development of new energy sources include $10 million for a new Energy Development Agency chaired by Energy Minister Bob McClelland.

It will co-ordinate and direct all government research and development in energy, and will support demonstration and development of alternatives to gasoline as well as expanding existing government programs to conserve energy and substitute for imported oil.

The budget notes B.C. is rich in natural gas but that oil reserves are declining.

"Therefore, $1.5 million will be provided for a pilot project to examine methods of recovering more oil from existing wells."

There will also be $1.8 million this year to hurry construction of the Sierra-Yoyo road near Fort Nelson to provide year-round access to northeastern gas fields.

Sales tax cuts for high mileage passenger cars and exemptions for energy-conserving devices are the other half of the government's budgetary energy arsenal.

But while it is discouraging gasoline consumption on the one hand, the government is making natural gas and electricity cheaper for homeowners by eliminating the sales tax on residential billings for these utilities.

Slim slowdown predicted

By AL FORREST

B.C. will experience an economic slowdown during 1980 but real growth in gross domestic product will increase 2.1 per cent compared with a Canadian average of only 1.0 per cent, according to budget documents released today.

The prediction is more optimistic than those issued by several Canadian economists who predict B.C. will be lucky to match the Canadian average this year.

Unemployment could rise to about 8.0 per cent in B.C. from 7.7 per cent in 1979, Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said.

This increase would be a reflection of generally weaker economic conditions in some sectors of the forest industry.

The unemployment rate in 1978 was 8.3 per cent.

The inflation rate is expected to be 8.5 per cent this year, 8.7 per cent in 1981, 8.4 per cent in 1982 and 8.1 per cent by 1983.

The government sees problems with high interest rates and declining markets for lumber.

In his budget speech, Curtis said all western industrial countries are expected to experience an economic slowdown this year.

In particular, the economic weakness in the U.S. will have a dampening effect on B.C.'s lumber exports.

Curtis urged British Columbians to look toward the longer term and predicted annual increases in the gross domestic product of between 4.5 per cent and 5.0 per cent in the 1981 to 1985 period.

This forecast, however, will have to be modified as further data becomes available.

The increase in the gross provincial product is estimated to have increased by 3.3 per cent for all of Canada.

Expansion in the forest and mining industries helped push capital investment up 23.4 per cent over 1978 levels, the budget said.

Municipal aid up 53 per cent

A 53-per-cent increase in provincial aid to municipalities is outlined in the new provincial budget.

The complete municipal affairs department budget is $331 million, up $117 million or 55 per cent.

The revenue sharing fund by which the province distributes resource income to towns and cities gets $176.2 million in 1980-81, up 24 per cent.

Transit accounts for another large part of the increase. The Urban Transit Authority will recieve $69 million this year, when Victoria and Vancouver take over responsibility for their bus systems and the UTA funds 75 per cent of the cost.

Last year the UTA got only $37 million.

The budget has something for automobiles too.

"To remain vital centres of growth, our major cities must be served by a balance of private automobile and public transportation systems. Neither must be neglected, since neither, alone, can fill the needs of all our citizens."

So the previously-announced third crossing of the Fraser River in Vancouver is allocated $30 million this year, towards the estimated $130 million total cost.

Budget brings sales tax cuts

Another major budgetary push is aimed at a long-term program for improved forest management.

"Consequently, $388 million is being allocated this year as the first stage in a five-year, $1.4 billion forest management program," said Curtis.

The human resources ministry gets a total appropriation of $762.9 million, up 17.4 per cent of the current fiscal year.

Indications are this will translate into increased rates for income assistance, day care and foster homes.

An additional $1.4 million is promised for increased subsidies to achievement centres for the handicapped — good news perhaps for the Langwood Centre for retarded adults in the western community, now faced with a possible shutdown at the end of the month.

The fiscal year just ending is expected to produce a surplus of $470 million.

Added to surplus funds left over from previous Socred budgets, this will result in $606 million in the Revenue Surplus Account on March 31.

Despite these surplus funds, the government continues to maintain the direct debt of $260 million it established in 1975 which — according to Socred calculations — was the deficit run up by the NDP government of Dave Barrett.

The NDP claims it is a false debt.

Curtis set aside $26.1 million to pay this year's installment of that debt.

Non-budgetary items — some paid as statutory appropriations, others financed out of the accumulated surplus — include:

—$55 million for a special fund for the province's contribution to capital financing of urban transit.

—A further $25 million for the Lower Mainland Stadium Fund.

—$15 million for development of B.C. Place in downtown Vancouver.

—$25 million for a municipal downtown revitalization program.

—$10 million for research by the proposed Energy Development Agency.

—$20 million for northeast coal development support facilities.

—$146.6 million for the new Forest and Range Resource Fund.

—$100 million for accelerated highway construction.

—$30 million for the Fraser River crossing at Annacis Island.

—$10 million for small business programs in metropolitan areas.

—$6.5 million for government-sponsored scientific research.

—$6.5 million for the first year of a special three-year park development program

—$4.5 million for employment opportunity programs for young people.

—$70 million to meet interest charges on the debt of the B.C. Railway.

—Hydro's borrowing power increased by $800 million.

Private schools get most

Regional colleges and private schools will get increases in their government funding of 15 and 20 per cent in the coming fiscal year.

But universities and public schools must make do with a much smaller increase.

The total education department is budgeted for a 15-per-cent increase to a total of $1,013,000,000 — the second largest departmental spending estimate.

The biggest chunk is for the public school system, kindergarten to Grade 12, but the $684 million set aside for elementary and secondary schools in the new budget is up only 6.7 per cent over the 1979-80 expenditure, less than the inflation rate.

But aid to private schools is up 20 per cent. Some $11 million is budgeted for the so-called independent schools of B.C. this year, up from $9,185,749 last year.

Regional colleges and technical institutes get $232 million this year, up 15 per cent while the three universities are budgeted for $262 million, only an 11-per-cent hike on last year's $233 million.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis said the colleges are experiencing rapid growth and deserve more money.

Gardom, Williams won't call inquiry into Vogel affair

Former attorney-general Garde Gardom and his successor Allan Williams have rejected an NDP call for a full public inquiry into the Vogel affair.

Gardom and Williams on Monday reiterated their respect for the integrity of deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel, who was placed on leave of absence Friday while allegations of interference with court cases are reviewed.

The review is being carried out by Williams himself, and he indicated Monday the job may take until the end of this week, possibly longer.

Gardom said associate deputy attorney-general Neil McDiarmid investigated a complaint and found Vogel had made an "error in judgment" in one case.

The error: "He stayed an appeal under circumstances in which the appeal probably could have gone ahead."

Gardom offered no suggestion as to why Vogel did it.

"Ask Mr. Vogel."

Nor would he suggest what motive McDiarmid uncovered for Vogel's error.

"Ask Mr. McDiarmid."

Gardom was asked if it was right that McDiarmid be given the job of investigating his own boss.

"That occurred to me at the time," he admitted. "The reason I picked Mr. McDiarmid was for the simple reason that he was the senior man and without question the best equipped and trained to look into the matter."

The man who had the job of attorney-general before Gardom, NDP MLA Alex Macdonald, said the people of B.C. are not content with the answers Gardom and Williams have been giving.

"We cannot be satisfied by an in-house investigation."

He called for a full, public inquiry by a B.C. Supreme Court justice "because there is a public interest in seeing there is no favoritism in the justice system."

The NDP peppered Williams and Gardom with questions in the legislature. They particularly probed the decision by McDiarmid not to lay influence-peddling charges against Socred MLA Bill Ritchie, despite RCMP and Crown counsel recommendations that charges be laid.

Williams said the decision was correct.

Macdonald asked how the minister could say that when he admits he saw neither the RCMP recommendations nor the report from Crown counsel.

Macdonald, meanwhile, has been under attack from judge Les Bewley for allegedly showing partiality in a murder case when he was attorney-general.

Macdonald denied it. He said he ordered a second hearing in the case to make sure it was handled properly.

He suggested Bewley's remarks might be slanderous.

Frustrated UN panel leaves Iran

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The UN investigating commission ended its 17-day mission today and left Tehran, thwarted in its attempt to talk with American hostages who Ayatollah Khomeini said could not be freed before May.

The five-member commission said it was "imperative that it confer" with UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim before pursuing its mission further in an effort to win release of the 50 hostages, now in their 129th day of captivity.

In Washington, White House officials reacted bitterly to this new setback, accusing the Iranian government of Iran of failing to keep its promises to the commission, and hinting the Carter administration would return to a tougher line of confrontation with Iran as a result of this week's events.

However, both Waldheim and White House officials were careful to leave the door open to a possible resumption of the UN commission's work, if there were a change in policy or power relationships in Iran.

U.S. congressional leaders, following a 40-minute briefing by President Carter and other senior officials, emerged from the White House counselling patience and declining to state a definite view of their own about any alternate U.S. policy.

Iran has hoped for official UN recognition of its grievances, but this was to be made public in exchange for yet unfulfilled concessions regarding the American hostages.

In a related development, it was announced today that Iran's deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi needs emergency surgery, but Carter administration officials had ruled out his return to the United States for hospital care.

He reportedly will be admitted to a U.S. military hospital in Panama because his health is failing and he is suffering from an abnormally enlarged spleen requiring immediate medical attention.

Iran's Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said he was "very disappointed" at the commission's departure but said it would return to Iran to "fulfill their mission as soon as the situation is reformed."

Pakistan coup foiled

United Press International

Pakistan President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq has crushed an attempted coup and arrested 26 top army officers involved, reports reaching the West said today.

There was contradiction among the reports as to precisely who was detained and how strong the challenge was to Zia, but different sources agreed that "something did happen."

One report said the deputy chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Mohammed Iqbal, was among those arrested. His post put him at the right hand of Zia, who is the country's army chief of staff. Another source disputed the arrest report.

The leader of the coup attempt was a retired infantry officer, Maj. Gen. Tajmal Hussian Malik, who was held in the central prison in Lahore, according to one set of sources.

The other army officers were in various jails throughout Pakistan, the sources said.

The officers were arrested last Tuesday and Wednesday when Zia, apparently warned of a festering revolt within the army hierarchy, moved swiftly to stop the coup.

The army officers had openly expressed dissatisfaction with Zia's continued rule as head of the martial law administration that has run Pakistan since July 1977.

Rate float rapped

phone interview from Toronto.

Stevens said the move was "a throwback" to one introduced in 1956 by the Liberals, "those masters of deception," which also followed an unpopular bank rate increase.

In defence of the bank's move, Finance Minister Allan MacEachen said today the new floating rate is not an attempt by the government to switch its responsibility for interest rate movements to the market place.

MacEachen, however, would not speculate on the movement of the treasury bill rate during the next weekly auction Thursday.

"I think we'll have to wait until the announcement of the auction," he told reporters following a Liberal caucus meeting.

Asked what the upper limit for the bank rate would be, he said: "That's a hypothetical question and I don't intend to answer it."

When asked whether the interest rate would be permitted to go as high as the market will bear, he said: "That's your conclusion. I'm not going to pronounce on upper or lower limits under this system."

Although the prospect of higher interest rates is usually a depresant for stock market, the Toronto Stock Exchange did an abrupt about-turn this morning, swinging sharply higher in the first two hours of trading after a record drop Monday.

By mid-afternoon the TSE index of 300 selected stocks climbed 34.22 points to 2008.81.

The composite index had plunged an unprecedented 71.12 points Monday, bringing the paper loss for the last three days to a whopping $11.9 billion.

age of the ship there is also a potential for breakdown.

The minister said when the government is responsible for the safety of a vessel there can be no room for doubt.

He said the vessel does not comply with 1979 safety standards.

Elworthy admitted he was "hoisted on my own petard" in his attempts to get the bigger and faster Queen of Surrey to replace the Marguerite. At one stage, he had threatened to resign if the Marguerite ran again this year.

In making a case for the Surrey to sail to Seattle, Elworthy had made the Marguerite out to be an unsafe vessel.

He said today he wanted the Surrey on the run was that he estimated it would save the B.C. Steamship Co. $1.2 million in fuel, wages and other costs.

Elworthy said he made his position clear at the last board meeting when he expressed his concern that the taxpayers' money was being wasted on the Marguerite.

He added that he didn't make a case for the 32-year-old steamship at today's meeting because he felt there was no point, that all the decisions had already been made.

Phillips, when asked about Victoria tourist operators' concerns that the Prince Rupert can only bring in half as many people as the Marguerite, said that in comparison to the people brought in by the B.C. Ferry Corp. those using the Victoria-Seattle ferry are "just a drop in the bucket."

Today's decision brought an angry reaction from Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber.

"The board of B.C. Steamship has been put into political receivership," Barber charged.

"This action constitutes the grossest political interference. Remember Mr. Bennett's promise of no political tampering with independent Crown corporations? That promise has exploded in his face."

Herring harvest 'bleak'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The strike-bound roe herring industry, worth $120 million last year, has netted co-op and non-union fishermen only about $7 million so far this season.

Federal fisheries spokesmen said that by noon Monday, only 9,653 tons had been landed.

"It looks pretty bleak," said a fisheries spokesman. "We're only up to one-third of the projected take.

"The season will probably carry through for a week or so in the southern section. Then it moves up north where we only projected 5,000 tons."

During the strike by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and the Native Brotherhood of B.C., plants which have continued to process fish have been picketed and picket boats have tried to persuade non-union fishermen from continuing to harvest the fish.

Court injunctions restricting pickets have been issued for plants at Delta, south of here, and at Victoria and Nanaimo on Vancouver Island.

A surplus of roe from last year, caused by high prices and consumer resistance in Japan, was a factor in prices offered the strikers by the Fisheries Association of B.C. which negotiates for 13 major processors.

The UFAWU and Brotherhood originally sought $1,400 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $850 a ton for seine-caught herring. The fishermen have come down to $1,030 and $630, respectively.

The Fisheries Association's best offer was $650 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $350 for seine.

When independent processors tried to get some movement in the dispute, the fishermen rejected their offer of $745 and $400 on Sunday night.

The Fisheries Association says it has given up on 1980 because too much of the season has gone.

McKenzie interchange still in picture: Fraser

An interchange is included in the second phase of the $7 million McKenzie Avenue extension project, according to Highways Minister Alex Fraser.

The interchange will not be built right away, Fraser said in a letter Monday to Saanich acting mayor Ald. Mary Casilio.

Council heard unofficially from a government source several weeks ago plans for the interchange at McKenzie and Pat Bay Highway had been shelved.

The interchange was considered an important part of the four-laning of McKenzie.

Fraser says in his letter properties purchased by his ministry near the intersection are for road widening, not for the interchange.

The interchange will be built at a later date, the letter says.

Saanich may have received the wrong impression from a preliminary plan given to the municipal staff last year which showed proposed right-of-way requirements for the interchange.

The plan was withdrawn because the ministry is taking a second look at its impact on neighboring properties. A new plan will be shown to Saanich later this year, Fraser said.

Private clinics: the new trend?

Plastic surgeons offer no-wait operations

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Plastic surgery cases, even non-cosmetic ones, have often been shuffled to the bottom of the list during the chronic bed shortage in Victoria hospitals.

But that is changing since Victoria's four plastic surgeons joined forces with five anesthetists and opened a private out-patient clinic in Oak Bay.

Although the public often thinks of plastic surgeons as being beauticians with medical degrees, most of their work really is reconstructive — correcting deformities such as cleft palates, repairing injuries received in traffic or industrial accidents, and doing wonders with burn victims.

Dr. Alastair Baird, one of the four plastic surgeons (the others are Drs. Paul Gareau, T.A. McQueen and H.R. Hollis), thinks the opening of the clinic is just the start of a trend towards private clinics that will continue as long as the provincial government squeezes hospital budgets.

Baird said the $250,000 clinic's main advantage will be its ability to take patients almost immediately.

It has the facilities to do just about any kind of minor surgery now done in hospitals.

Baird said before the clinic opened it was extremely difficult getting some types of surgery scheduled at all. For example, breast reduction for women with large breasts causing discomfort, was almost impossible to get scheduled, he said.

Breast reconstruction surgery for women who have undergone radical masectomies is another operation that was moved to the bottom of the list. This also may now be done at the clinic.

"Let's not suggest this is the hospital's fault. They're doing the best they can with some very scarce resources. It's really the provincial government's fault. There's a terrible bed shortage in Victoria and I don't see a quick solution to it," Baird said.

"I'm not all that critical of the government squeezing hospital budgets ... they're a monster that can eat us all, but they're pushing us too far."

He predicts Victoria, like other areas particularly in the U.S., will move towards a medical system where the government only provides basic medical services and assists the poor. Any extras would be provided by private facilities.

"I think soon we'll see the time come when those who want anything special — if they want surgery quickly, if they want a private or semi-private room, a choice of doctors — they'll have to turn to a private hospital."

The Victoria Outpatient Anesthetic Ltd., as the clinic is called, is at 1830 Oak Bay Avenue. It is similar to two in Vancouver and others across the continent. It's not designed to provide overnight care to patients although in the future it might.

It has all the equipment and services provided by any modern hospital (for minor surgery) but it won't make patients wait months for a bed.

The clinic has three operating rooms and six to eight recovery rooms. It will also be used for dental surgery and can be booked by other doctors with ocassional minor surgery cases that don't want to wait for a bed in one of the acute-care hospitals, Baird said.

The doctors at the clinic have asked the city's senior pathologist to do regular health and safety inspections.

The clinic will work in conjunction with a home-care nursing service and patients will be required to have someone stay with them at home when they leave at the end of the surgery, Baird said.

Surgery at the clinic will be more expensive for patients than if they were admitted to hospital.

A basic charge of $50 per half hour of operating room time will be charged to the patient regardless of whether the patient is undergoing cosmetic (not covered by the provincial medical insurance plan) or non-cosmetic surgery (covered by medical insurance).

For example, a patient for non-cosmetic surgery, could choose to wait for a hospital bed and the entire cost would be paid by the provincial medical insurance plan.

But if the patient chose to have the operation done quickly at the clinic the medical plan would be charged for the usual cost of the operation and the patient would pay for time in the clinic's operating room. A cosmetic surgery patient would pay for the cost of the operation plus the operating room time.

Some just want tummy tucks

Don't like the lump on your nose? Want to get rid of that extra roll around the tummy? Fed up with wrinkles?

Modern medical technology can help.

Victoria, like every other large city on the continent, has plastic surgeons able to correct those flaws.

Plastic (from the Greek "to repair") surgery takes two main forms, according to Dr. Alastair Baird, one of Victoria's four plastic surgeons.

About three-quarters of the plastic surgery done in Victoria falls into the category of either correcting a natural deformity or repairing an injury, while the remainder is considered purely cosmetic surgery.

The line is not always easy to draw, said Baird, but the provincial medical plan pays only for the non-cosmetic type.

Non-cosmetic work done by plastic surgeons includes such things as repairing cleft palates, hand and feet surgery, repairing injuries from burns and other reconstructive types of procedures. Plastic surgeons have also tackled such delicate work as building ears for people born without them.

Baird described the work a plastic surgeon does as being basically similar to that of an ordinary surgeon with the single exception that he's meticulously neat.

Victoria, unlike larger cities such as Toronto or Los Angeles, doesn't have plastic surgeons who practise only cosmetic surgery, he said, although the demand is growing.

The most common cosmetic operations include facelifts, rhinoplasty or nose repairs, baggy eyelid corrections, breast augmentations and "tummy tucks."

While such surgery isn't cheap it isn't only for the rich either, Baird said.

Costs for cosmetic surgery vary greatly according to the individual case but, roughly estimated, facelifts cost between $800 and $1,500, nose alterations $450 to $600, breast augmentations $600 to $800, tummy tucks $650 and eyelid smoothing, at most $600.

The demand for plastic surgery isn't as great here as in California or even Vancouver, said Baird.

Vanity, of course, is the reason behind such surgery, he said, but all higher civilizations display an interest in perfecting life and what more natural place to start than the body.

"I'm sure if you were a member of a Bantu tribe in Africa it wouldn't much matter if one ear stuck out. I suspect in Russia today there isn't much call for this type of surgery," he said. "But we're affluent. This sort of luxury isn't just for the wealthy ... everyone's comparatively wealthy here."

Annegret Reich is a little shy of publicity these days.

The 42-year-old baker at The Breadbasket, a bakery in the Hatley Park shopping centre, wouldn't come to the phone when she heard a reporter wanted to chat about her $100,000 win in a recent Western Express lottery draw.

A lottery press release reveals Mrs. Reich has one child and has no plans for the money.

Our Town Talk sleuth knows what he'd do with $100,000 (or $1 million, for that matter) and he'd be leery about talking to newshounds, too. He'd also be tough to reach in Tahiti.

Those green St. Patrick's Day milkshakes at McDonald's may be wasted on our local blind population but the new Braille menus posted on the walls at each of the area's burger outlets are a welcome touch.

"We've had quite a few comments since we put it up a week ago," says Dan Laidlaw, assistant manager of the Pandora operation.

Georgina Pawlyshyn of CNIB just around the corner on Blanshard applauded the move but told Town Talk that to her knowledge. The Raven's in Harbour Towers is the first Victoria restaurant to have a Braille rundown of its meals.

Victoria actor Peter Stuart, interviewed recently for an entertainment section article, was dismayed to discover that a remark about Rod Steiger "breaking up" the set of the Canadian movie Yukon Fever had been interpreted literally.

What Stuart meant to convey was that Steiger's antics made everyone on the set laugh. Thrice-divorced Steiger was celebrating Lee Marvin's court victory in last summer's celebrated palimony case.

Stuart, who says acting is a funny business, was concerned he'd never work again if Steiger and other show biz types got wind of the misinterpreted comment, so the Times is setting the record straight.

Springtime has been fad time since the first schoolchild wended to class with a bag of marbles or a pocketful of jacks.

And fads, like spring, come first to Victoria, probably because there's less mud on the ground.

Yo-yos, frisbees, hula hoops, skateboards — they all have their time and most get recycled at least once.

This year it's the bo-lo bat's turn.

The original bo-lo was a ping-pong like, plywood paddle with a spongeball attached to it by an elsatic cord. A well co-ordinated player could keep smashing the ball almost indefinitely.

Nowadays the bat is plastic and bo-lo is gone competitive with promoters touring schoolyards and toy departments to encourage would-be champs.

Would we be right in saying those who can remember the first bo-los date themselves back to the 1940s?

Only Parker Bros. know for sure.

MacBlo loves Marmota Vancouverensis Swarth and to prove it, the giant forest firm will donate more than 500 acres on Vancouver Island to provide protected reserves for an endangered species of marmot unique to the island.

The marmot is a distinct species found only in a few mountainous areas and naturalists believe its ancestors were isolated on the island when the last ice age receded, 10,000 to 12,000 years ago.

Last year fewer than 70 of the marmots were sighted but it's hoped that MacBlo's donation of company-owned lands in its Cameron and Chemainus woodlands divisions will allow the wee beasties to make a comeback.

New splash to freedom?

William Head prison officials are wondering if two inmates who vanished Monday night tried to swim to freedom like two others last month.

David William Stevenson, 23, and Samuel Sidemny El Safadi, 18, who disappeared the night of Feb. 18, are presumed to have drowned.

Prison director Arlie Bender said today no one knows which route to freedom Roger Henry Lalonde, 29, and Malcolm James Pittman, 26, may have taken.

The two disappeared between the 7 and 10 p.m. head counts.

Officials say if they tried to swim to freedom, there is little chance they survived in the frigid water.

Lalonde, who was serving six years for robbing a Vancouver hotel and trafficking in marijuana, was transferred to the prison on Feb. 12.

Pittman, sentenced last fall in Toronto to two years for possession of stolen property and failure to attend court, arrived two days later.

Bender said searchers with tracking dogs failed to find any trace of the pair either on the prison grounds or the shoreline. The search continued today.

Lalonde was to be released July 11, 1983, and Pittman on Dec. 4, 1980.

Jubilee veteran to resign

The medical director of Royal Jubilee Hospital will step down March 28 for health reasons.

Dr. Ray LeHuquet, 52, interned at RJH then operated a family practice in conjunction with the hospital.

LeHuquet, named medical director in 1972, said he is resigning on his doctor's advice after having to take several medical leaves last year.

Three hunted in beating, theft

Saanich police are looking for three youths who robbed an 18-year-old northern Interior visitor Monday night.

A police spokesman said John Fritsen of Topley, B.C., was walking in the 3100-block Harriet about 9 p.m. when attacked from behind by three youths who kicked and punched him and then ran off with his wallet containing $150 in American Express travellers cheques.

Fritsen, who was shaken but otherwise unhurt, returned to the Gorge Hotel and called police.

The spokesman said the description of the suspects is similar to three youths who walked away from the provincial minimum security detention camp near Jordan River on Saturday.

Smith plans B.C.-oriented social studies

B.C. schools need a social studies course emphasizing Western Canadian and particularly British Columbian history, Education Minister Brian Smith said Monday.

He said in an interview there must be locally-produced textbooks to accomplish that.

"I will take steps to commission a British Columbia textbook, published in British Columbia, written by British Columbians for British Columbians," he said.

The minister said it is important the province does not become "a cultural branch plant of Toronto and New York."

Other school texts should also be Canadian in flavor, Smith said, particularly those in the primary grades. Preference will be given to textbooks with made-in-Canada labels, he said.

"I'm going to be quite nationalistic as an education minister."

Smith said the Ontario government has established a special fund to aid in production of Ontario-oriented educational materials.

"I have been watching closely what they have been doing and we may move to set up a similar British Columbia fund," he said. "That would be a strong, positive new direction in which we could move."

Smith stressed he is not prepared to recommend such a move at this stage; the matter is still under study. But a recommendation may be ready to go to cabinet later this year.

Israel announces Jerusalem suburb

Times News Services

JERUSALEM (Reuter) — The Israeli government today disclosed plans to seize a large tract of Arab land near Jerusalem to build a new Jewish residential neighborhood.

Finance ministry sources said an order signed Monday night by Finance Minister Yigael Hurwitz authorized expropriation of 1,100 acres north of Jerusalem on land conquered by Israel in the 1967 war.

The decision came in the face of the United Nations Security Council resolution 10 days ago calling for dismantling of all Jewish settlements on Arab land. It was greeted with fury in Israel and President Carter subsequently withdrew United States support of it.

The finance ministry sources said the expropriation was not intended to be an Israeli reaction to the UN vote.

The sources said the aim is to build a new Jewish suburb to join Neve Ya'Acov to the rest of Jerusalem. Neve Ya'Acov is currently isolated five miles north of the nearest Jewish neighborhood of French Hill.

The new suburb will virtually complete the encirclement of the Arab areas of Jerusalem by new Jewish suburbs.

Meanwhile, in New York, Rabbi Meir Kahane, founder of the Jewish Defense League, was arrested along with two other men Monday during a demonstration against the Carter administration's U.N. vote on Israeli settlements.

Manhattan Borough President Andrew Stein, who had joined the protesters, was caught in a shoving match between police and demonstrators outside a Club building where Robert Strauss, national chairman of President Carter's re-election campaign, was meeting with Jewish leaders.

Stein, his voice shaking, said there would be "hell to pay" with the police department and called the officers' actions "excessive political brutality."

Kahane was charged with assault, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct. The other two men, Eddie Izso, 19, of Manhattan and Robert Schondorf, of Seaford, were similarly charged.

One police officer was slightly injured when demonstrators tried to rush the building.

About 200 demonstrators, including members of the North American Jewish Students' Network and Mobilization for Israel, were protesting a meeting at which Strauss explained the administration's controversial vote to about 50 Jewish leaders.

In a related development, Yitzhak Shamir, a conservative who opposed the peace treaty with Egypt, became foreign minister of Israel on Monday.

The appointment strengthens the hawkish government faction.

Mass ransom in the cards?

BOGOTA (UPI) — Governments whose 20 diplomats are being held hostage by leftists guerrillas in the Dominican embassy may be asked to provide the $50 million ransom the terrorists are demanding, a reliable source in the Colombian capital said.

The source said the possibility the governments could pay the ransom demanded by the guerrillas from April 19 Movement, known as M-19, came up during talks Monday between the insurgents and Colombian government officials.

'Scarsdale Diet Doctor' comes to violent end

PURCHASE, N.Y. (UPI) — Dr. Herman Tarnower, 69, author of the best-selling "Scarsdale Diet" book, was shot to death Monday night and the headmistress of a fashionable girls' school in Virginia who helped him with the book was arrested early today and charged with the killing.

Tarnower was found by a police officer Monday in a bedroom of his spacious, ultra-modern home in the wealthy New York suburb of Purchase, police said today.

He died at a hospital about an hour later.

Police said Mrs. Jean S. Harris, 56, headmistress of the Madeira School, a small, exclusive girls' school in Greenway, Va., was charged with second-degree murder.

Police said a handgun believed to be the murder weapon was recovered in Mrs. Harris' car near Tarnower's $500,000 house, which is located in an exclusive area of suburban homes.

Tarnower's work was a best-seller in the late 1970s. Tarnower guaranteed that a dieter would loose a pound a day if he stuck to the plan.

The 14-day diet emphazises not so much restricting quantity of food as controlling the kinds of food eaten. Tarnower said body weight is dependent on the chemical reaction between foods.

Harrison, N.Y., patrolman Brian McKenna, responding to a call from Tarnower's servants, said he first spotted the suspect in a car heading down the 500-foot driveway of the author's home.

He said that when Harris spotted him she turned around, stopped the car, and told him of the shooting. A .32-caliber pistol was found in the glove compartment of her car.

Money Talk

A series in which Montreal Trust answers your questions.

"Daily interest on savings – why all the fuss?"

"There's been a lot of talk lately about daily interest on savings but I, for one, don't mind admitting that I'm thoroughly confused about the whole idea. Could you explain to me what all the fuss is about?"

It's true there's been a great deal of publicity about daily interest, with many financial institutions investing in large advertising campaigns to promote the new service.

Basically, the idea is to calculate interest at the end of each day instead of monthly, so that you don't lose out on a single day's interest. You see, when interest is calculated monthly, it is worked out on the minimum monthly balance. This means that if, for example, you have $1,000 in your account for 29 days, and $10.00 for just one day, the interest for the whole month is calculated on the basis of the $10.00.

Daily interest saving is designed to overcome this problem. It sounds great, but unfortunately, it's not quite that simple, because you're currently offered a lower rate of interest when it's calculated on a daily basis.

So how, in the end, do you decide which method of calculating interest is going to give you the best returns on your particular savings account? The answer is, in most cases, with great difficulty.

In fact, it's a question we at Montreal Trust have been asked many times and, after careful consideration, we believe we've come up with a solution.

Our answer has been to introduce a method by which you don't have to make the decision as to which is best, because we do that for you.

With our Plus Savings Account, we now automatically calculate, each month, the interest both ways. Then we give you the greater amount, whichever way it happens to turn out. The interest is credited to your account twice a year.

This is the first, and as far as we know, the only savings account of its kind in Canada. It circumvents the whole problem and, judging from our customers' comments, has been a welcome move.

If you have any questions about our services, write, call, or come in and see us at the address below.

Afghan refugees flee from Soviets

KHAR, Pakistan (AP) — Thousands of refugees, many of them injured and near starvation, are trekking painfully through the snow-covered mountains of eastern Afghanistan to Pakistan after fleeing villages destroyed by Soviet soldiers.

Most of them are women and young children. Many of their husbands and fathers died fighting in the Soviet offensive last week to drive the Moslem rebels from nearby Konar province.

Attaullah Khan, Pakistan's commissioner for the Bajaur tribal district, said 2,000 new arrivals in the last week brought the district's refugee population to about 35,500, with an estimated 5,000 more still to be registered.

Khan said one camp contained almost 1,000 orphans.

Among the newcomers was Maulana Zarawar Khan, a bearded mullah (Moslem cleric) from Asmar, a village in Konar about 80 kilometres north of Khar.

He said Russian soldiers arrested him in the provincial capital, Chigha Sarai, because they suspected him of links with the anti-Communist guerrillas who controlled most of Konar until the end of February.

Zarawar Khan said he escaped in the confusion of the Soviet air strikes on villages around Chigha Sarai and made his way back to his village.

"I arrived there a week ago, just after the village was bombed," he went on. "Everything was desolation. At least three-quarters of the houses were destroyed. The population had scattered in all directions, like the petals of a dead flower."

Khan said he trekked over the mountains with the women and children of his family to bring them to safety. But he said he plans to go back to take up the struggle again.

Abdel Wahid, a farmer from Chigall, herded his family and their meagre belongings into a truck-taxi for the trip to the refugee camp. He said "hundreds of Soviet tanks" surrounded the village and shelled it while Soviet jet planes made bombing runs.

Picket violence

LONDON (AP) — About 1,500 striking steelworkers, many shouting "Let's get back to work!" battled pickets in the steel town of Corby on Monday as new talks began here in the 10-week-old countrywide walkout against state-owned British Steel.

The fighting erupted after union members across Britain rebuffed union leaders and voted by a wide margin to hold a secret ballot on a new 14.4 per cent pay offer by British Steel.

After the Sunday night voting, Sir Charles Villiers, chairman of the state-owned steel corporation, charged that the leader of the biggest steel union, Bill Sirs, is living in an unreal world if he thinks his members want the strike to continue.

Denied move, Davis defies NFL

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. (AP) — The National Football League refused permission Monday night for Oakland Raiders to switch their franchise to Los Angeles but general managing partner Al Davis said he will make the move anyway.

NFL commissioner Pete Rozelle said Charles Sullivan of New England Patriots made the motion as to whether the transfer should be approved and it was turned down with 22 negative votes and five abstentions — Philadelphia Eagles, Cincinnati Bengals, Miami Dolphins, San Francisco 49ers and Los Angeles Rams.

"The prevailing sentiment was in favor of our constitution and by-laws," said Rozelle, who admitted there were several court cases pending in the matter.

"Our position is that the Oakland Raiders will play their home games in the Oakland Coliseum in 1980," Rozelle said. "We will schedule them in Oakland."

Davis had announced he wanted to move to the Los Angeles Coliseum, which had been vacated by the Rams, who are moving to Anaheim Stadium in adjacent Orange County starting with the 1980 season.

Davis talked to the media after Rozelle made his report. Davis denied some published reports that he favored anarchy in the NFL, saying, "I no more favor anarchy than Pete Rozelle does and he know it. I just wanted to be treated the same as Caroll Rozenbloom (the late owner of the Rams), and others were when they moved.

"This meeting, as far as I'm concerned, was attorney dominated. I'm not allowed in the meeting when the attorneys don't want me and they take votes when the attorneys want them.

"I believe the fact-finding committee did a job, but it was not entirely objective. When it was suggested we take a vote, I said it was too early. Then the member from New England asked for the vote and the attorney made the decision that it could be done."

Davis said Rozelle told him he will receive the last proposal by the Oakland group but declared: "No one is going to negotiate a proposal in Oakland for me. The league can't negotiate for me in Oakland. I'm tired of being run by attorneys.

With Vikettes 'No. 1', can Vikes get double?

Add to the lengthening list of Victoria's national champions — University of Victoria Vikettes. Better still, put them on top for this year, hopefully the first of many as was the case last year. Certainly they are No. 1 and it was a great victory in the national women's collegiate basketball final, coming from behind, as they did, from a 15-point deficit. That's a long way back. And it was a long time coming, this national title. Vikettes had been there several times before, were often favored and weren't about to be denied again. That would have been too much.

This time there was no mistaking which was the better club once the gals of coach Kathy Shields settled into stride. There was no panic as might have been the case with a lesser squad which is a tribute to the coaching staff as well as the players.

Now it's up to the Vikings to make it two in a row for UVic. The Vikes didn't have much trouble with Calgary Dinosaurs here in the series opener Friday for the Canada West crown, although it was a rather tame affair. But they almost blew the second game when they got too complacent after building up a huge lead. Still, that's understandable. A letup was due. Calgary figured to break loose after being held in check for such a long time. And the Vikes did win, and that's what counts. Now, if they can keep their wits about them — they can't afford the luxury of a similar let-down again — they should do well in the nationals. A double for UVic, besides being rewarding for a highly successful season, would be a rare accolade indeed and maybe a first in the country. Has another University ever won both?

With Rick Folk of Saskatoon representing Canada in the Air Canada Silver Broom world curling championship, I imagine most curlers are happy, feeling the best rink won the Brier. And I imagine too the CBC is probably breathing a collective sigh of relief. Paul Gowsell, the bearded redhead from Calgary, who lost in the semi-finals to Al Hackner's Northern Ontario rink, simply wasn't one of the CBC's favorite people. The reason: he showed a reluctance to be interviewed. The problem goes back a few years when Gowsell and his second world championship junior rink were invited to play in the CBC classic. Gowsell said fine, but not with that rink. He wanted to enter his first championship foursome (the one he played with in the Brier). When the CBC declined to adhere to his request, Gowsell said he would prefer not to enter and told the CBC what it could do with its classic. The incident was recalled when it was rumored for a time at Calgary, that Gowsell, or one of his rink, might show up on the ice wearing a shirt with a logo: CTV: The one to watch.

Actually, judging strictly from the TV news shots, CTV did just as well, if not better than the revered CBC through most of Brier week. And I thought the final wrapup by CBC following Sunday's final was shoddy to say the least — rushing the winners to the camera for a phoney presentation because time was running out. TV fans at least were cheated out of much of the pageantry of the windup: pipers, officials, massed rinks, presentations, et al.

Folk was full value in the Brier final, thanks obviously to that early 6-0 lead and he should do well in the World, although Canada's record is not that great in international competitition. It may be recalled too that Folk, with the same rink, played in the Playland Cash last fall where he went out quietly. But then so did Gowsell. Victoria's Tim Horrigan and his VCC rink didn't let the side down either in the Brier. Five victories were commendable for a starter as in only two games was Tim really out of it before the final ends. Keith Dagg, who should know, was at the Brier and probably died as many deaths as Horrigan, gave Timmy's rink of Lowell Goulden, Kelly Horrigan and Dave Smith full marks for a fine performance and that's good enough for me.

On the future book, sport fans will be missing a good bet for action if they don't take in some of the games of the big International Universities rugby tournament at UVic starting Thursday of this week. This is a class tournament with teams from New Zealand, England and the United States, in addition to Canadian teams, taking part. Don't say you weren't told.

Cats, Hawks digging deep

Victoria Cougars and Portland Winter Hawks will both be digging just a little bit deeper for a victory tonight during a Western Hockey League game at Memorial Arena.

Game time is 8.

Portland stands atop the Western Division with 97 points while the second-place Cougars trail with 92 but have four games in hand over the leaders.

Cougars and Hawks are now 5-5 after 10 games this season and each team has won once on opposition ice.

Cougar coach Jack Shupe, who is looking for more goals from the Barry Pederson-Greg Adams combination, will again start rookie Daryl Coldwell on right wing.

Coldwell scored one of the two Victoria goals Sunday as Cougars dropped a 3-2 decision to Bruins in New Westminster.

Pederson, the team leader with 127 points, has scored three times in his last five starts while Adams, the top marksman with 54 goals, hasn't connected now in four games.

"Daryl played well against New Westminster," said Shupe.

Harper gets back in hunt, but Lacheur drops a pair

Times News Services

Glen Harper's British Columbia rink, determined to avenge a first-round loss, spoiled the records of previously unbeaten Saskatchewan and Ontario on Monday, leaving Prince Edward Island alone in first at the Canadian senior men's curling championship in Saint John, N.B.

New Brunswick also picked up two wins Monday for three straight — one less than Dr. Wendell MacDonald's foursome from Charlottetown.

Harper, from Duncan, trailing Ontario 9-5 after eight ends, capitalized on his opponents' back-to-back misses for a four-ender in the ninth and then stole one in the 10th for the win.

Earlier he defeated Saskatchewan 7-3. Saskatchewan later snuck past Northern Ontario 7-6 in an extra-end game, Alberta downed the Territories 7-4, New Brunswick took Newfoundland 8-6 in a thriller that went down to the last rock, and Nova Scotia earned its first win by downing Quebec 10-6.

MacDonald, a three-time champion, is making his 16th appearance in the national final.

MacDonald dumped Newfoundland 7-4 in the abbreviated morning draw and Nova Scotia 8-4 in the afternoon.

In Charlottetown, P.E.I., Jackie Rae Anderson's Alberta rink moved into the lead in the Canadian junior women's championships.

Anderson's rink took an easy 9-3 victory from Maureen Moss' Northwest Territories rink in the afternoon draw, then defeated Shannon Affleck and her Manitoba rink 6-3.

The two wins gave Anderson a 4-1 record.

Oak Bay's Lana Lacheur, representing B.C., lost two games, 8-7 to Ontario and 9-8 to Quebec. Lacheur has a 2-2 record.

The Ontario rink skipped by Patricia Barnaby held on to second place with a three wins and one loss.

In the world men's junior at Kitchener, Mert Thompsett's Winnipeg rink scored its third straight win but the spotlight shone on a Scottish rink skipped by Andrew McQuiston.

While Thompsett won, 7-5 over France, McQuiston forced nine blank ends to finally take a 1-0 win over Switzerland. Few can remember a game going nine full ends without a score and it set records for the Uniroyal in low score and consecutive number of blank ends.

Canada shares first with Denmark and the United States after the third round while Scotland and Sweden are next with two wins and a loss.

In Camrose, Alberta, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island were tied for first place with 2-0 records after two draws in the Royal Canadian Legion championship.

Fred Duncan of Port Alberni is 1-1.

Davies shares double crown

REGINA — Kelly Davies of Victoria shared a doubles crown and collected a consolation title Sunday as British Columbia players dominated finals of the Western Canada junior (under 18) indoor tennis championships.

Laird Dunlop of Vancouver defeated Douwe Cosijn of Calgary 6-1, 6-2 in the boys' singles final and then teamed with Tony Macken of Vancouver for a 4-6, 6-0, 6-0 doubles victory over Calgarians Rick Marrigan and Rick Hunter.

Vivian McAdam trimmed Laura Slade 6-2, 6-1 in an all-Vancouver girls' singles final, but Slade came back to join Davies for a 1-6, 7-6, 6-4 doubles triumph over Vancouverites McAdam and Susy Hunter.

The B.C. sweep spilled over into the consolation singles finals as Davies defeated Edmonton's Jody Carver 6-3, 6-3 and John Bowering of Vancouver bested Calgary rival Rob Tkachuk 6-2, 6-2.

Kinks face toughest test before trip to Cup tourney

Victoria Kinks will leave March 21 for Edinburgh, Scotland, where they will defend the "C" division title they won last year in the World Cup hockey oldtimers tournament in Tokyo.

But before they go, the Victoria veterans, who began playing for recreation and became a little more serious with the emergence of oldtimer hockey, will get a tough workout — or perhaps a working over — at the hands of what is probably the strongest of all veteran squads — the newly-formed National Hockey League Old Stars.

Boasting such ex-greats as Frank Mahovlich, Bob Nevin, Eddie Shack and Dennis Hull, the Old Stars will play the Kinks in [illegible] Friday in Memorial Arena, where tickets are now on sale.

The game in Victoria will be one contest on a Western Canada tour for the Labatt-sponsored Old Stars, who play the Vancouver Canuck Oldtimers in Vancouver two days later.

Manager-coach Ross Brewitt plans to have at least 16 former NHL players in the lineup that also includes Mike Pelyk, Norm Ullman, Andy Bathgate, Jim Pappin, Marv Edwards, Harry Howell, Pierre Pilote, Larry Carriere, Dean Prentice, George Morrison, Bob Wall and Keith McCreary.

As well, there is "a chance" that Bobby Orr will play. Orr has agreed to play in Vancouver but a Victoria appearance remains up in the air because of other commitments.

Playing an entertaining brand of oldtimer hockey that involves no body checking or slapshots, the Old Stars have already delighted and impressed fans elsewhere in Canada with performances like their 7-6 win over the Thunder Bay Twins Senior "A" club and their 10-6 victory over the first-place Windsor Spitfires of the Ontario Major Junior Hockey League.

Their coach says that what mainly dates the Old Stars is that some of their NHL careers [illegible] than the ages of the young opponents they have played.

That won't happen in Victoria against the Kinks, whose ages range from 36 to 52, but the Old Stars will have a considerable edge in pro experience.

Although they are based in the city, the Kinks boast only one player — goalkeeper Ted Spouse — who was born in Victoria. The rest, originally from centres up-Island, on the Lower Mainland or elsewhere in Canada, all live and work here and most acquired their hockey experience in junior or commercial leagues.

Playing coach of the Kinks is Morley Trenholm.

How sweet it was in Atlanta

Times News Services

Harry Neale would not call it revenge, but it was sweet.

"We weren't worried about revenge," said coach Neale after his Vancouver Canucks had defeated Atlanta Flames 5-2 in Atlanta Monday night. "We wanted the two points.

"But, I have to confess, I did remind my fellows what they did to us in the third period last Friday."

The Flames came up with five third-period goals to trounce the Canucks 9-3 on that occasion. But it was a different National Hockey League story Monday.

"We wanted this one bad," said Brent Ashton, who got four assists for Vancouver, tying a team record. "We play well on the road. Last Friday night, we got burned on several two-on-ones, and tonight we made sure we had the third man down."

Being used on power plays, in a game which saw 22 penalties, helped his assist total, Ashton conceded. He set up three second-period goals, two by centre Gary Lupul.

The Canucks went ahead first, on a goal by Kevin McCarthy after eight minutes of play. The Flames got that one back in the second period, Ken Houston chipping the puck over a sprawling Gary Bromley.

The score was tied at 1-1 when Ashton fed Lupul for an eight-foot, power-play goal. Less than a minute later, ex-Flame Ivan Boldirev took an Ashton pass and drilled a six-footer past Flames' goalie Pat Riggin.

Ashton set up Lupul again at 15:45, and passed to Dave Williams for the Canucks' final goal, at 11:17 of the third period.

Neale praised the work of defenceman Harold Snepsts: "He's played six excellent games in a row.

"Tough, physical hockey is hard to play all the time, "and you get lots of penalties by doing it," Neale said. "But you have to do this in the playoffs and Atlanta will learn that. We hope to be in the playoffs ourselves."

In the only other game, Montreal Canadiens defeated Los Angeles Kings 6-3 to move into a third-place tie with Boston Bruins in the over-all standings. Each club has 88 points, four behind Buffalo.

Wenzel puts lid on crown

Times News Services

Andreas Wenzel of Lichtenstein made sure of the men's alpine skiing World Cup when he finished fourth in the giant slalom today at Cortina D'Ampezzo, Italy.

Wenzel, the brother of women's World Cup winner Hanni Wenzel, only had to finish seventh or better to take the title.

Ingemar Stenmark of Sweden, who headed the World Cup table before the race with 200 points, won the giant slalom in a time of 3:05.64, but this did not add to his points total since he had reached the maximum for one discipline.

Austria's Hans Enn was second in 3:08.25 and Joel Gaspoz of Switzerland third in 3:08.82.

At Saalbach, Austria, Claudia Giordani of Italy won her third World Cup slalom race during the final event of the season by finishing ahead of Christa Kinshofer of West Germany and Hanni Wenzel.

In baseball, the National Labor Relations Board moved Monday to force baseball's National League to release its evaluations of umpires to the Major League Umpires' Association.

The ruling came some six months after the umpires' union filed charges of unfair labor practices with the NLRB.

At issue was the NL's refusal to supply the ratings of umpires — both the veterans who staged a seven-week strike last season and the rookies who replaced them and then were added to the league's permanent staff.

On the Olympic question, the International Amateur Athletic Federation announced it would withhold approval from any athletic meets organized to coincide with the 1980 Summer Olympic Games in Moscow as part of a boycott over the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

At the same time, a group of Australia's leading athletes denounced the Australian government's proposed boycott of the Moscow Olympic Games.

In skating, Olympic silver medallist Jan Hoffmann of East Germany traced three winning compulsory figures to take the lead after the opening phase of the men's competition at the world figure skating championships in Dortmund, West Germany, ahead of two Americans.

Olympic gold medalist Robin Cousins of Great Britain was fifth.

Hoffman, a 24-year-old medical student, placed ahead of David Santee Ill., and Charles Tickner, the Olympic bronze medallist.

In cricket, the second Pakistan-Australia cricket test petered out in a draw in Faisalbad, Pakistan.

Sports tonight

Hockey provides the only live-action choice for Victoria-area sports fans tonight.

Saanich Braves, who hold a 2-0 lead, meet Oak Bay Trios in the third game of their best-of-five South Vancouver Island Junior "B" League playoff final at 7:30 in Pearkes Arena.

At 8, Victoria Cougars take on Portland Winter Hawks in a Western League contest at Memorial Arena.

York first Viking rugby foe in international tourney

First-class rugby will be the order this week as the University of Victoria stages an eight-team, three-day international universities tournament, beginning Thursday and running through Saturday.

UVic Vikings have drawn York of Toronto for their first match in a field that also includes teams from Britain, New Zealand, United States and the University of British Columbia.

Perhaps rating the roles of favorites are clubs from Exeter University of Britain and Auckland University of New Zealand.

Other entrants are from the University of California campuses at Los Angeles and Berkeley, which are traditionally strong sides, and Brigham Young University.

Auckland will feature All-Black trialist flanker Dennis Thorn who has played 46 times for his province; Greg Denholm, another trialist who has captained Auckland province; flyhalf Ron Peters, who has played for New Zealand Maoris, and prop Mark Gray, who has represented Taranaki province.

Playing for Exeter will be two of England's under-21 representatives, centres Paul Larkin and Gary Pickersgill, and former Welsh junior national Alan Watkins.

UBC will provide a strong side with three Canadian nationals, Graham Taylor at fullback, Gonzo Russell at No. 8 and Andrew Bibby at centre. Bibby this week was named to play for Canada in an international seven-a-side tournament at Hong Kong in April.

Two of the better known UVic players are Gary Grant, also named to the Hong Kong team, and Pat Trelawny. Both have played for Canada.

Teams are divided into two divisions, A and B, with UBC, UCLA, Exeter and Brigham Young in one division and UVic, Berkeley, Auckland and York in the other. After round-robin play, top two teams in each division qualify for sudden-death knockout.

Opening matches Thursday have UBC meeting Brigham Young at McCoy Road and Exeter meeting UCLA at Centennial Stadium at 11 a.m.

Uvic meets York at McCoy Road and Auckland meets Berkeley at Centennial at noon.

Brigham Young plays Exeter at Centennial at 4, York meets Berkeley at 5, also at Centennial; UBC clashes with UCLA at McCoy Road at 6:30 and UVic goes against Auckland at McCoy Road at 7:30.

Three other Victorians have been named to the nine-man B.C. Rugby Union team which will compete in the Pacific Rim seven-a-side tournament at Hong Kong.

Joining Grant from the Island following weekend trials are Ray Rogers and Hans de Goede of James Bay Athletic Association and Paul Monaghan of Oak Bay Wanderers.

Mainlanders joining Bibby are Spence McTavish, Ro Hindson and Robbie Greig of UBC Old Boys and Garry Hirayama of Ex-Brits.

Sixteen countries will take part in the event.

Techs collect second berth

DataTech gained two points and clinched second place in the Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League despite dropping a 98-83 upset decision to seventh-place Victoria Athletics in a game Monday at Central Junior High School.

Jim MacKay sank 25 points and Tom Holmes added 18 to lead the Athletics while Don Burrows (22 points) and Brian MacKenzie (20) led DataTech.

DataTech collected the points they needed when Trilec Juniors announced they were forfeiting a game scheduled for Wednesday.

The regular league season wraps up Wednesday with a game between Strathcona Ivy's and Henderson Realty at 9 p.m. at S.J. Willis Junior High School.

Green sets pace in masters event

HANEY — Andy Green of Victoria, who was named the 1979 B.C. Track and Field Association master athlete, won the 15-kilometre Golden Ears masters handicap road race Sunday around Golden Ears Park.

Green, who is 71, covered the distance in 73 minutes, 19 seconds.

Andy was almost three minutes ahead of his closest rival among the 20 masters (over-40 men and over-35 women) who finished the race.

Shirley Smith of Coquitlam, who was a team-mate of Green's at the 1979 world championships in Hanover, West Germany, won the women's race.

Former bus-line owner admits direct sales

The former owner of a bus line that operated a service to Vancouver International Airport admitted Monday he sold one-way fares directly to the public, in one instance, to an undercover RCMP officer.

Alexander Izatt, who sold Convair Coach Lines Ltd. in late 1978 to Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Greer, at first insisted he had not personally charged individual fares when he operated the company.

He said he was under contract to five travel agencies and they charged the customers.

Izatt was testifying in Convair's bid to have the Motor Carrier Commission reverse its Jan. 10 ruling in which the company was refused a licence to operate the airport service and ordered to stop the illegal service already doing business.

In its ruling, the commission noted that Hustle Bus Ltd., of Victoria was already licensed to operate the airport service.

Izatt insisted he only sold individual fares because of an Air Canada strike.

"I thought it was an emergency situation," he said.

The company's charter was to provide service only for the five travel agencies, but Izatt distributed tickets to five other travel firms without applying to the commission for permission.

The hearing resumes next Monday at the Law Courts.

$1M rental outlook dampens CRD zest

Capital Regional District directors will take a hard look at alternatives before renting space in the new Saanich Centre that could cost $1 million over 10 years.

The CRD's community health and social services committee was told Monday 1,400 square feet of space on the second floor of the new centre at McKenzie and Quadra would cost $6.95 per square foot if 50 underground parking spaces were designated for CRD use.

The CRD has been told by Saanich council the space now being occupied by the CRD's health unit in Saanich municipal hall is needed for municipal use. The Saanich Centre is being considered for relocation of the Saanich and University Heights units.

On top of the rental, the CRD will have to pay renovation costs and directors were told the landlord is prepared to amortize these costs over a 20 years at 13.75 per cent.

Saanich director John Mika observed this means an outlay of $97,300 annually for rent plus additional renovation costs.

"We're talking well over $2 million in a 20-year period just for space, not for operating costs," chairman Ken Hill said.

Directors were told the lease is subject to CRD approval by April 9.

The lease would be renewable at five-year periods.

The directors will make a final decision March 26.

Chamber jumps to Pole's support

The Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce has joined groups across the country trying to get the federal government to change its mind about deporting Tadeusz Jakubowski back to Poland.

Jaycee executive vice-president Nurray Hughes said a letter is being sent to federal Immigration Minister Lloyd Axworthy asking him to delay Jakubowski's deportation for one month until he has an opportunity personally to review the case.

Jakubowski has said that if he is returned he will suffer religious persecution.

"It is our believe that the only way Tadeusz can receive a fair and personal hearing from the minister concerned is by the general public pleading his case."

Sound of winds 'genuine gold'

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A Sunday-Monday pair of concerts in the Recital Hall at the University of Victoria marked the debut of a new wind ensemble entitled Harmonie.

The group had appeared previously in half-hour lunchtime concerts at the McPherson Playhouse, but this was its first full-length public performance.

The event uncovered genuine gold.

Organized by bassoonist Jesse Read and patterned after a European experience of last year, one can only regret that it has surfaced at the end of the regular season.

The ensemble is an octet formed of pairs of oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons. Its roots are deep in musical tradition for it was an established and favorite court ensemble in the time of Mozart and Haydn and invariably called Harmonie.

This octet consists of a combination of UVic faculty and Victoria Symphony players, and was revealed as a distinct adjunct to the professional musical scene.

The particular combination of instruments has a quality and vitality of sound that is exceptional in its richness and frequently haunting. Nothing quite equals a wind instrument in the hands of an accomplished performer, in the matter of spinning long satiny phrases and ornamenting them with grace and fluency.

The players were attractively costumed in the Haydn-Mozart period, providing visual interest to augment the delights of the ear.

They are William Benjamin and Katharine Hartung, oboe; Richard Ely and Joan Watson, horn; Thomas Dowling and Stephen Pierre, clarinet, and Jesse Read and Nancy Hilborn, bassoon. Janet Underhill joined the group on contrabassoon for a performance of 18th century Franz Krommer's Octet-Partita.

Much music was written specifically for these groups and the program presented two examples: Mozart's Serenade No. 12, K 388, and the Krommer work. Another tradition illustrated was the arrangement of operatic music which had high popularity at the time.

Mozart's Marriage of Figaro provided the spirited opening. The familiar music presented as a 10-part suite preserved all the charm of the original, lending itself to the character of the winds admirably.

With this appealing performance Harmonie established itself as an accomplished ensemble technically, and a gathering of artists focusing their talents in ideal unanimity of concept.

Throughout, the program attack was precise with one slight deviation in the Krommer; texture and quality of tone was excellent, achieving at different times, a light-shot airiness, a sturdy close-woven lushness, a clear full-throated resonance.

There was so much to admire about the whole performance that it seems out of order to suggest that any one of the four items was a highlight. But for sheer perfection of adaptation, for the ultimate in charm and performer virtuosity, it would seem impossible to surpass the Beethoven variations on the Mozart Don Giovanni aria, La ci darem la mano.

For these exquisite variations the octet resolved itself into a trio consisting of the two oboes and Jesse Read playing English horn.

This was an elegant performance as well as a brilliant one and likely to remain in my memory as a particular highlight in a season's listening.

Esquimalt weighs new offer to buy into Royal

Esquimalt council wants time to consider another offer from the other three core municipalities to buy into the Royal Theatre.

The offer came from Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie, chairman of the Royal Theatre committee.

Esquimalt Mayor Ken Hill suggested council reserve its decision for discussion with the budget.

Esquimalt was offered a share for the same price — $25,000 — that it turned down in 1973 when the other three core municipalities bought the theatre for $250,000.

The most recent offer was made to Esquimalt in spite of $600,000 spent on a facelift of the theatre.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis has indicated Esquimalt's participation would make a difference to the sharing of a proposed renovation program.

It has not been decided how the provincial and municipal governments will split the cost of the proposed $2.3 million in renovations.

Hill said he originally opposed Esquimalt's participation in the operation of the theatre because $200,000 would have been required to upgrade it.

McKenzie said those renovations have been made and the theatre now operates with a substantial surplus because of an agreement with Famous Players.

Unions at odds over board hiring

A spokesman for school district employees struck out today at building unions and contractors worried about plans by the district to hire more tradesmen and do more of its own contracting.

Bob Cunningham, president of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Local 382, representing school board outside workers, said he is irked by criticism of the board's hiring program.

He said neither the Construction Association of Victoria nor the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council has contacted the union about the move.

"If these people want to make an issue of this thing they have taken on the right group," Cunningham said.

He said he didn't hear from either one of these bodies a few years ago when there were layoffs of school district tradesmen.

At their meeting Monday night trustees said Victoria builders have the wrong idea about plans to hire more tradesmen for school board work.

Responding to an urgent letter from the construction association, the school board agreed to meet representatives of CAV and construction unions to discuss the change of policy adopted at a previous meeting.

Trustees also will invite spokesmen for its CUPE employees, the unions covering trades, maintenance and administrative office staff.

The association is concerned that $2.7 million worth of capital construction work was to be earmarked for in-house undertakings, for which additional trades staff were to be hired.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood said she was at first astonished at what she took to be interference by the private construction industry in school board policy. She then reflected that it sheds light on what had been taking place in the last few years.

First duty of the board, Greenwood said, is to see that tax money is spent most efficiently, not to hand money out to private contractors.

"Obviously they've got a lot of misinformation," chairman Carol Pickup said.

Only minor renovations and alterations would be undertaken by the board's own work force, many of which projects are long overdue.

Large building jobs would still go to private contract, she said.

Secretary-treasurer Carl Warner said the district's work force was reduced two years ago because budget limitations did not permit certain maintenance jobs. Now that funding for that kind of work has been approved, the district wants to restore conditions to what they were in 1976-77.

Without adding to the current force the work would still be undertaken by district tradesmen, Warner said, but it would take longer.

Trustee Mike Hutchison said it was not quite correct to say the policy simply resumes a former program. The scope of work was also to be raised from the $50,000-$60,000 range to jobs valued at $150,000-$200,000, and that may indeed affect the private sector.

Cunningham said the work to be done by the newly-hired employees is the same kind of work done by the CUPE people before the layoffs.

He said an estimated 46 temporary workers will be hired for a two-year period or as long as the capital construction program lasts.

Trustees allow teacher a toddy

Greater Victoria school trustees Monday adopted a new policy that will allow drinking in the schools on special occasions.

Amendment of regulations was not intended to recognize a regular children's hour, but the glass of sherry traditional in some staff rooms at the end of the term may become more widespread.

Trustees responded to a request from Oak Bay Secondary School reunion committee to hold a wine and cheese reception in the school May 30 as part of 50th anniversary celebrations for the building on Cadboro Bay Road at Cranmore.

School District 61 rules at present forbid "possession or consumption of intoxicants on any portion of school premises." The new clause permits the superintendent of schools to approve consumption of alcoholic beverages on written request.

Applicants must restrict attendance according to terms of a temporary liquor permit, issued by the Liquor Administration Branch, and make adequate control arrangements.

Failure to comply will mean refusal of school facilities for at least three years.

Trustees Win Mott and Terry Hackett opposed the amendment, Mott suggesting that no regulations other than the law of the province are required for liquor control. Trustees, he said, should be concerned only about the use, or abuse, of school property.

He also observed that the former rule prevented churches from using communion wine in schools.

Trustee John Young said it is conventional in some schools, including those where he was teacher or principal, to have wine in the staff room on the last day of school.

Blood clinics rest of week

A total of 238 donors attended the blood clinic at Red Cross House on Fort Street on Monday.

Another clinic was held in the gymnasium of CFB Esquimalt today.

Clinics will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria.

Effects of class lighting examined

When the lights go on in the classroom, undesireable behavior is triggered in the minds of some students — or so the theory goes.

Greater Victoria school board trustee Lavinia Greenwood wants the district to do some research on classroom lighting to determine its harmful effects.

It might be found some emotional disturbances are traceable to classroom lighting, she said Monday, reminding the board of a visit last month by John Nash Ott, specialist in behavioral effects of lighting.

Ott, who met school officials, drew particular attention to the hazards of fluorescent light.

The use of fluorescent lighting is becoming more widespread, Greenwood said.

A professional study should include controls and may be undertaken in co-operation with another participant such as the University of Victoria.

Trustees adopted her resolution and requested the administration to look into feasibility, costs and funding.

Job-finder scheme proved a flop: NDP

The B.C. government's job-finding program for people on welfare is a flop and the government's own figures prove it, an NDP MLA says.

"It is the biggest boondoggle created by this government," Rosemary Brown (NDP — Burnaby-Edmonds) said Monday.

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy disclosed last week she is working on another job-finding program for welfare recipients to replace the Provincial Rehabilitation and Employment Program (PREP) set up by her predecessor, Bill Vander Zalm, now municipal affairs minister.

The government has spent more than $2 million during the last two years to find jobs for 21,000 people and of these nearly 4,000 were placed by Canada Manpower, Brown said.

"The program is obviously discredited, otherwise she (Mrs. McCarthy) would not be coming out with this 'new creative way' of finding jobs that she is talking about."

The figures, tabled in the legislature, show the government spent $2.1 million on PREP between Jan. 1, 1977, and March 31, 1979, and found jobs for 12,454 people in 1977, and for 8,934 in 1978. The figures don't show how many jobs were found during the first three months of 1979.

Of these, 408 were placed in provincial ministries and 227 in federal ministries. Canada Manpower placed 3,453 people.

There was no indication if the jobs were permanent or temporary, their duration or if any welfare recipients were placed more than once.

The figures also show the federal government subsidized 723 of the jobs in 1977 in the amount of $1.2 million while the province subsidized 18 for $59,000.

In 1978, the federal government provided $250,000 for 241 jobs and the province $36,000 for 41 jobs.

A total of 55 people, with salaries ranging from $1,276 to $1,575 a month, administered the program.

Mrs. McCarthy refused to provide details on her new program.

She said the new program does not mean PREP is a flop: "It means that we're hoping to broaden the program. We're asking PREP people for ideas on how it can be enhanced."

Conservation not ICBC issue

Rates set by the Insurance Corp. of B.C. should not be used as a tool for promoting energy conservation, the minister responsible for ICBC said Monday.

Agriculture Minister Jim Hewitt was commenting on reports that the new ICBC premium schedule tends to favor motorists who drive large gas-guzzlers instead of those who drive the small gas-savers.

Comparing a Cadillac and a Honda is like comparing apples and oranges, Hewitt said.

He blamed the higher premiums for smaller cars on the rapidly increasing cost of imported automobiles.

There is no discrimination by ICBC, he said, and it is up to the consumer to consider gas consumption when he buys his car.

"ICBC has to base its premiums on statistics. Otherwise the system itself would break down. The consumer should be guided, not by the insurance premium, but by the mileage he gets from his vehicle."

The ICBC has reported a surplus of $2.9 million for the last fiscal year.

The annual report, released Monday, covers only a ten-month period to allow an adjustment of ICBC's fiscal year so it ends Dec. 31 instead of Feb. 28.

Revenue for the ten-month period totalled $364.9 million while claims and expenses totalled $362 million.

ICBC president Robbie Sherrell warns in the report for the third straight year of the growing seriousness of claims costs, particularly claims of compensation for bodily injuries.

The report shows the ICBC's investment fund totalled $525 million at the end of last year, making it one of the largest sources of liquid capital in the province.

It is invested entirely in Canadian investments with priority given to B.C. institutions and it returned an income of $52 million to ICBC in the period covered by the report.

The fund exists to cover unsettled claims and continuing payments from past years.

Starvation diet for forestry?

Government parsimony has put the forest industry on a starvation diet, says a letter sent to all MLAs by B.C. professional foresters.

The letter is an attempt by the Association of B.C. Professional Foresters to promote public discussion about the industry.

"The association has made a firm commitment in the last few months to strive to achieve public prominence," association president Gary Kenwood said recently. "Rather than responding to issues which may in the past have put us on the defence, we will be taking the initiative."

The letter cites a Canadian Pulp and Paper Association table which says that, of every dollar in revenue collected from the industry by Canada's senior governments, only 25 cents is reinvested in the forests.

"Statistical evidence is often regarded with suspicion by many people," the letter says. "In this case, people have asked why is a reinvestment rate of 25 per cent too low?

"Our answer is that several recent studies on the state of the forest resource in Canada support our conclusion that the senior governments do not spend enough money on forestry. In every case, neglect of renewable forest resource has been thoroughly documented."

Kenwood said the association would like to see more funds available, not only for the regeneration of land currently being cut, but for land where earlier regeneration programs have not worked well. He said there also is a pressing need for better management of existing stands.

The association is not completely pessimistic, he added, because new provincial legislation is making forest management and regeneration a priority.

Energy plans scrutinized

Anyone proposing an energy project in B.C. will have to be prepared to justify it in both social and economic terms, Energy Minister Bob McClelland said Monday.

McClelland said a stricter review process is a key part of his new energy policy and new projects will be subject to stiff technical scrutiny.

The minister was speaking to the annual convention of the Canadian Electrical Association and said he hoped to have the necessary legislation in place by the summer, in time to deal with at least a couple of the major projects which B.C. Hydro is proposing and others from the private sector.

Alan B. Shepard Jr., the former astronaut, and two others were charged over the weekend with a misdemeanor stemming from the development of a housing subdivision on land in Texas said to be flood-prone. The others accused were a former mayor of Houston, Louie Welch, and a Houston developer, Jack Coogan. The charges came after some purchasers of land in the Conroe, Tex., subdivision complained that it rested on a flood plain. The purchasers said they would have to build 21 feet above the ground to obtain a building permit and flood insurance. Shepard made history with his 15-minute flight into space aboard the Freedom 7 in 1961, and later was the commander of the 1971 Apollo mission to the moon.

A man was charged recently with offering a police undercover woman $10 if she would let him "kiss her feet." Manhattan judge Martin J. Erdmann let him go. Not sexual conduct, says he. "Princes and prelates for time beyond memory have permitted subjects and supplicants to express devotion in such a fashion. The fact that a certain few of these worshippers may derive erotic satisfaction from this act does not suffice...to conduct non-sexual conduct into sexual conduct."

Pope John Paul met for 35 minutes with Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere in the pontiff's first official activity since coming down with the flu. But the Pope, apparently still feeling weak, skipped a memorial mass in the Sistine Chapel for the late Jean Cardinal Villot of France held earlier in the morning. Nyerere, a Roman Catholic, had visited Pope Paul VI three times. John Paul received the African leader in the papal library, where the two men held "private talks."

A newspaper interview published in London Sunday quotes Prince Philip as saying he is looking for any excuse, including a convenient illness, to avoid the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow. The prince is due at the Games in his capacity as president of the International Equestrian Federation.

He got a ship and she kept a cocker spaniel when the marriage of Christina Onassis and husband No. 3, Sergei Kauzov, ended, the Greek shipping heiress is quoted as saying by a London newspaper. The Daily Express says Onassis divorced her Russian husband of 18 months in Switzerland two weeks ago and that the split was amicable.

abby

Dear Abby:

Although I haven't spent much time in school, I have worked hard to improve my English. In recent years one of my best guidelines has been the Dear Abby column. Therefore, I hope you will not be offended if I ask you to quit using the word "Asiatic" when referring to the continent of Asia, or its people. People of Asian descent consider it not only incorrect, but insulting. It means "more than a little insane, or some kind of nut."

Those who have served in the armed forces will confirm this. Please use "Asian" instead.

Joe E.

Dear Joe:

Thanks. I learned something today. Although my dictionary states that "Asian" is preferred to "Asiatic," it gives no hint that the latter is insulting. The put-down was inadvertently Occidental.

Dear Abby:

I need some advice. I am 22 and will be getting married next month. My fiance and I communicate quite well, except when it comes to my past sex life. I never bring it up, but he does.

I wasn't a virgin, but he was. We have been intimate, and he knows he was not the first.

My problem is that I am afraid he is going to ask me who the guys were I had sex with. (Yes, there were more than one.) I never led what you would call a "wild life," but I've been with more than one guy. I'm not sure whether I should feel as guilty as I do about my past, Abby, even though I know it's hurting my fiance.

Feeling Guilty

Dear Feeling:

It's not necessary to name names. Silence is golden. But it needn't be guilt.

Dear Abby:

I am the mother of two very pretty and popular daughters. One is 16 and the other is 17.

The older girl is stringing three boys along at once. She wears a "promise ring" from one, an ID bracelet from another and a necklace from a third. None of these boys knows about the others, and when one calls here and she is out with another, I have to lie to keep from hurting the caller's feelings.

The younger one is going with two boys. Each thinks he is the only one. One is so jealous he has threatened to do bodily harm to any other boy who comes near "his girl." She is getting tired of them both, but doesn't want to hurt either one, so I have to lie to them when they call.

How does a mother get uninvolved? If I were to tell these boys the truth, they'd be terribly hurt.

In the Middle

Dear In:

You should also teach them to be honest. Start telling it like it is, Mom, and encourage your daughters to do the same.

Cotton fans pay for comfort

By LON WOOD

In the Fifties, when Nylon was a status symbol, everyone owned a Terylene shirt or blouse and there was no limit to the range of colors available in a v-neck Orlon sweater.

There was also Banlon, Rayon, Dacron — and cotton became something of a plebian fabric. Lately, however, it has begun to acquire prestige again — beyond those ubiquitous designer jeans. Merchants are finding that the label "100 per cent cotton" on fashion sheets, men's and women's shirts and blouses and bathroom towels is a sought-after feature.

In the past year, all-cotton men's and women's shirts, towels and sheets have been introduced because consumers want natural fabrics, say representatives of Victoria's four main department stores.

Cotton fashion goods locally are receiving the same advertising treatment and in-store promotions once reserved for goods made of other kinds of fabrics. Notable in this area is Cotton Week planned for this May when city department stores, in conjunction with the Cotton Council of Canada, will promote cotton goods instore and out throughout the week.

Despite the fact that cotton can wrinkle easily and require ironing, technological advances can alleviate this factor. While they can add to the purchase price of the item, in most cases Victoria consumers appear to be willing to pay for the absorbancy and softness of the natural fabric.

While manufacturers have introduced all-cotton shirts in a variety of colors and patterns, sheet manufacturers have thus far introduced only solid-color goods; but they plan to introduce a more fashionable line in the future.

The main impact of the cotton revival is in fashion — young fashion.

"With the young, cotton fashions and cotton with at least a little bit of polyester is one of our biggest selling items. This goes for pants, dresses, t-shirts and active sportswear — the jogging look," says fashion supervisor Aldis Nault of Eatons' No. 1 and Peppertree shops.

"Our best sellers are the ones that have over 50 per cent cotton in them," she said. "When it comes to young people — depending on their lifestyle — a few extra dollars if they get what they want doesn't matter."

COTTON SPORTSWEAR with distinct white eyelet pattern has strapless top with pearl button closing hip-length shorts and a matching jacket. Three-piece outfit retails for about $135.

But today's young person is more willing to take special care of expensive cotton clothing, says Nault.

"Young people are doing more handwashing and not being overly impressed by the fact they can just 'throw it into a washing machine' as with most synthetics.

"In all, they now have an awareness of how to look after fabrics."

Donna Wallace, assistant manager of Woodwards ladies wear, said she finds 100 per cent cotton clothing is hard to come by at prices reasonable enough to pass on to the average buyer.

"I get people all the time asking about cotton shirts and we can't get enough," she said. "We have a hard time getting 100 per cent cotton blouses. Most people find the mix good for washing an wearing without pressing. We get a blend of 65 per cent cotton and 35 polyester. That's about the closest we get for general buying and that is for blouses in sportswear — other than 100 per cent cotton t-shirts for summer."

Wallace said her store's Shop International does stock 100 per cent cotton shirts running at about $50. "This is a basic tailored shirt — very nice but nothing special when you compare mixes that look and feel like cotton and sell below $25."

The Bay's manager of ladies fashion and accessories, Adele Matte, said she has found there is lots of cotton available if you are willing to pay for it.

"The very fine cottons such as come from Switzerland through outlets like Liberty and Ports are showing up as dresses and blouses in your prestige departments and garments," she said. "It's selling well in yard goods as well — but with some polyester for shrinkage and wrinkle.

"In both cases the price is higher than it used to be — but people are asking for it, or at least higher cotton content."

Bobbi Todd, manager of Sears' Junior Bazaar, said her customers prefer the comfort of cotton but often compromise by taking the mix for the care factor.

"Another fabric they are taking to is the blend of polyester and viscose," said Todd. "This gives the polyester a smoother texture — it isn't as scratchy."

Beginning three years ago with designer all-cotton jeans (and, later, stretch cotton denim), the emergence of cotton in more fashionable goods coincides with a resurgence of consumer interest in comfortable, natural products.

All four store representatives concurred that the revival in cotton's popularity stems from customer demand for comfort and naturalness.

"The trend began here about two years back," said Nault. "I know we're talking cotton now but we're seeing it more in all fabrics — cotton, wool, silks. People want fabrics they feel good in.

"Cotton used to crease a certain amount but I think that was just the way it was woven. Now, some are almost like silk."

Matte said there is no polyester that can breathe like cotton.

"Cotton has properties that no synthetic has," she said. "It's a cool fabric, it breathes, it's a natural fabric. And while it creases and shrinks, washed properly it's no problem.

"People are fed up with synthetics nowadays. They want cotton, real wool — real wood, whatever."

Wallace said many people have developed allergies to certain synthetics and that cotton — especially in summer — is comfortable, cooler and more absorbent to help prevent heat and chemical reactions.

"It's funny," she said, "we've been through cotton before, and then all that polyester — and now we're coming back to cotton again."

Shoppers have some views on cotton as well. Some buy polyester/cotton blended sheets because of their wide range of patterns and colors.

But some steer clear of blended sheets because they find it hard on their skin. They claim the cotton ones aren't — and buy them without caring if they are more expensive or more wrinkly after a wash.

To counteract wrinkled sheets, some manufacturers have brought out sheets which use a combination of polyester fibres and cotton in a new way: During the spinning process, each strand of polyester is wrapped in cotton, then the sheet is woven. The process incorporates the no-wrinkle properties of polyester with the softness of cotton against the body.

The sheets are about 50 per cent higher in price than comparable blended sheets.

Thus far, most of the merchandising of cotton fashion goods has come from manufacturers. Arrow, for example, introduced its all-cotton men's dress shirt, called Cotton-Ease, in January of last year. The company spent an estimated $1 million in magazine ads, according to industry sources, the largest single-product expenditure in Arrow history. The men's shirts were also advertised in women's magazines, since a sizable number of purchasers are women and since many of them care for their husbands' shirts. The company has since introduced all-cotton Lady Arrow blouses.

Narrowing vessels cause dizzy spells

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I'm 68 years old. I still run a small grocery shop and I'm pretty active for my age. My only problem is that when I reach up to the higher shelves I get a quick flash of dizziness. My doctor says it's my age, but I've got friends who are older and they don't have this.

Mr. E. I.

Dear Mr. I.:

In your [illegible], changes occur in the blood vessels that could account for this unpleasant symptom. Narrowing of the blood vessels that carry blood from the heart, through the neck and to the brain, can cause a momentary lack of oxygen when there is a sudden change in the position of the head. In that moment the brain may be deprived of an adequate amount of blood and oxygen.

When this is the cause of the sensation that you describe, patients are advised to avoid sudden rapid changes of position, especially with the head extended backwards. When they sit up from a lying-down position, they are told to get up slowly and thus allow the flow of blood to the brain to gradually adjust to the new change of position.

There are now a great number of remarkable and accurate methods by which the flow of blood to the brain can be studied. Arteriograms and angiograms are special techniques for learning which of the major arteries are closed by arteriosclerosis. In far-advanced cases, many brilliant surgical methods are used to open up clogged arteries in the neck.

Transplantation of blood vessels are extremely successful in attacks of dizziness which are constant and incapacitating.

This is not to intimate that your condition is serious enough to warrant the tests and procedures I have mentioned. Yet, if you are severely distressed, it might be worthwhile to have a vascular checkup.

That your older friends have not complained of this symptom simply means that their vascular structure is different from yours.

Dear Doctor:

Do you think that karate is too dangerous a sport for a young teenager?

Mrs. G.S.

Dear Mrs. S.:

Karate and many of its variations, known as the "martial arts," are excellent forms of exercise. There are some hazards for those who are not completely supervised and competently trained.

Youngsters who become overenthusiastic have been known to suffer from, and to have inflicted, severe damage to the liver and spleen while practicing this sport.

In smoke detectors, performance is not always closely related to price. You can't buy the most expensive one and figure you've got the best you can get. Here's how to find a good smoke detector for your home:

Check with the local fire department to get advice on installation of smoke detectors.

Before buying from a door-to-door salesperson or agreeing to have your house wired, check with the Better Business Bureau to see if they have had complaints about companies serving your community.

Shop 'around in electrical, hardware and department stores and your mail-order catalogue. Also check with your insurance company — some are selling smoke detectors at low prices, but they offer little or no choice. In local stores look for sales people who have been selling smoke detectors for some time and may be able to advise you on specific brands.

Decide whether you want a battery-operated or electrically-operated unit. Battery-operated units have no cords, can be mounted anywhere and will function during a power failure or when the fire is started by faulty wiring, but batteries must be replaced. Some electrically-operated units have standby batteries, so they will operate when the power is on. Electrically-operated units can be plugged in or connected directly to the wiring.

Decide whether you want a photoelectric or ionization unit. Photoelectric units have a small light bulb which must be replaced in 3 to 5 years. They are somewhat more likely to respond quickly in the case of a smoldering fire than an ionization unit would.

youth clinic

Dear Dr. Powell:

I am writing to you about fertility pills. I am almost 17 and very mature. You are probably going to think I am stupid and don't know what I am talking about but I am positive about the following: I have finished high school and don't want to pursue a career or go to university. I would very much like to get married and have a large family. I feel that I could handle the big responsibility with the right man to help.

I have met a man that I deeply love and we plan to be married shortly. He owns his own house and car (both paid for), he has a good steady job and money in the bank. We are both healthy and fertile people and we want a large family.

Now, I am wondering if I could take pills to have a couple of multiple births rather than go through several single births? Is there an age restriction even though I would be married? Is it a gynecologist who prescribes them or a specialist? Of the women who take them, what percentage of the births are multiple? Of the multiple births what is the average number of children born at one time? What percentage is stillborn?

Do you think I could get a prescription from a doctor?

Answer: I would not question that you know what you want at 17. Your desire for a husband, family and home is as important to you as a career or other goals are for other people. I think your statement about being able to do what you want to do with the support of the right man is very important. You have to be very sure that the man you marry has the same goal you have and I hope you are able to see your dream come true.

Fertility drugs are for therapeutic use, not for convenience. They are not pills you can get a prescription for and take as you want to. They must be carefully monitored and are only given when there is a medical indication for them. This indication is infertility, which results from the woman failing to ovulate. You state you are fertile, so I assume that means that you have been or are pregnant. Forget about using a fertility drug just to allow you to achiev a large family without the inconvenience of a large number of pegnancies.

A single child coming into a family creates a number of changes in the relationship between the parents and the physical demands to provide for the child. Ask any other of twins, triplets and even more about about the extra time, the extra cost of adding to your family in multiple births and you will find that the inconvenience and stress outweighs any advantage you may think you would gain by a multiple birth.

There are problems associated with a multiple baby pregnancy — an inceased risk of miscarriage and premature birth make it more hazardous for the baby.

Forget about the fertility drug for the present. Try a single pregnancy for the first time. You may even be lucky and get twins naturally.

Dear Mr. Vichert: Recently I had an affair with a guy. I am 14 and he is 16. I tried to tell him we did things too soon but he didn't listen. Now he almost totally ignores me. I know he feels embarrassed and ashamed and I do, too. What should I do to get his attention? I think he still likes me but I need help.

Answer: I agree you would have been wiser to wait, since intimacy of this kind produces strong feelings often easier to understand if one is older and has more experience. The important thing is that you liked each other and now you want to get the feelings straight.

The one way to do that is to let him know what you feel. If he does like you, then it's possible he's just as anxious to know how you feel. The best approach is to walk up to him and say you would like to talk a few minutes. Don't worry about what to say. The words usually just come once you get started.

It is important you don't end up feeling ashamed and confused because you cared about someone.

the collectors

By KEN RICHARDSON

Once considered of interest only to German collectors, steins have thousands of devotees across North America. Some prefer to specialize in those made of pottery or glass. Some of the earliest specimens came from the Rhone Valley: made of stoneware they sported the famous metal (usually pewter) handles and lids, the sides decorated with bright colors. Hard paste Meissen in the late 1700s rate highly but are very rare.

Mettlach steins by Villercy and Boch became immensely popular the world over for their magnificent decoration.

Military steins ussued for individual regiments were often pesonalized for soldiers, sometimes featuring a lithophane base.

Wedding steins, depicting couples in old fashioned dress are widely sought.

Occupational steins enjoyed great popularity from 1890 to 1914. They displayed trade symbols and were often a mark of achievement or to denote promotion. It was the practice to keep such steins in the local tavern, on a shelf above the bar. The men would meet there at night, Sundays or holidays to enjoy a beer and each other's company, discussing matters of mutual interest.

Antique stores, shows and flea markets, garage sales.

Possibly the most interesting steins are those concerned with occupations that have died out or become modernized to the point that the same tools or methods are no longer used. The stonemason, blacksmith, forester or mounted mailman are good examples. Check for lithophane base by holding stein up to the light.

Mettlachs range from the low hundreds to anywhere around $2,000.

Firing case is still in courts

MONTREAL (CP) — Jocelyne Dauphin said it was a classic case of sex discrimination and she wasn't going to take it any more.

She and 49 co-workers were laid off by a tobacco company while men with less seniority were kept on. She remembered reading about Quebec's new Human Rights Commission, and she took the story to them.

Three years later, Dauphin and the commission are still fighting their case in the courts. Her experience — some victories and some setbacks — is a fair example of how the Quebec government's human-rights watchdog agency is working.

The four-year-old commission takes on about 1,000 cases a year. When it gets a complaint, it first seeks the other side of the story. If it considers the complaint justified, it always tries to mediate a solution, which works about nine times out of 10.

Quebec's human rights charter, which the commission was set up to apply, covers more ground than any other such document in Canada.

It prohibits discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, handicap and social condition — such as being a welfare recipient or ex-convict — as well as on the basis of race, color, sex, language, political conviction, ethnic or racial origins.

Rene Hurtubise, president of the commission, says most complaints involve sex-based job discrimination, as in the case of Dauphin and her fellow workers.

Jocelyne Dauphin . . . 'a classic case of discrimination'

Dauphin, 35, was enjoying her job at Imperial Tobacco — nice people, decent pay, a new labor contract just signed.

Then, in March and April, 1977, she and 49 other machine operators — all women — were let go. No men were laid off, even though many of the boys who wrapped and packed tobacco products had been at Imperial for a shorter time than the women.

Their union was no help: separate seniority lists for men and women were written into the collective agreement.

Many of the women were the only breadwinners in their families.

"I'd never been an activist before, but the whole thing was so frustrating," Dauphin recalls. "Here it was, women being crushed and shoved aside again. It just wasn't right."

After several planning sessions with the laid-off women, she called the commission.

Its investigators said she had a case. In their opinion, the separate seniority lists and job categories kept by the company contravened the human rights charter.

Imperial said it didn't know it had been breaking the law and would change the illegal policies. The case was complicated by the fact that some of the 50 women affected would have been laid off even with a combined seniority list.

Imperial offered a compromise by which it would rehire 10 women, and seven did come back. That wasn't enough for Dauphin and her group, who wanted compensation for moral damages and lost wages for 10 other women who had not found other jobs.

Last year, the commission took the case to court on behalf of the women. The damage suit is still before Quebec Superior Court.

"Before all this happened, we didn't really know what our rights were," says Dauphin, who now is a jail guard for the Montreal Urban Community police.

"Then we reacted. We saw that we could do something to protect ourselves, and as a result we have gained courage. Even if we don't get all we want, we're going to see this thing through to the end."

Some people barely get a beginning.

"I can't deny that there is great difficulty in getting proof, and that is very disappointing and frustrating for people," says commission president Hurtubise.

"Unless you have witnesses to explicit statements or actions, how do you prove that someone has been denied a job because he is black, or that someone is subject to sexual harassment on the job?"

Hurtubise sees the human-rights records of Quebec and the rest of Canada as paradoxical.

"People are proud of their tradition of tolerance, but at the same time they are indifferent, they take it for granted, they don't care enough. So our tradition is a very fragile one.

"Canadian courts to a certain extent share this indifference, and aside from one or two decisions, have not been generous to human rights."

Hurtubise says there have been some "less-than-glorious" periods in Canada's history — "you only have to look at the treatment of the Japanese during the Second World War, the Jehovah's Witnesses in Quebec. . . ." But he adds:

"All our commission and others like us can do is act as a trustee of people's rights, to educate them as to what is theirs. It is up to the population to be alert to blows against those rights."

looking good

By RENA PAUL

I have always dabbed perfume behind my ears. Recently I read that that is no longer considered proper. How come?

Kay T.

Dear Kay:

It is not a question of etiquette. Experts found that natural skin oils can interfere with the scent and therefore recommend using perfume in areas where these are scant. The insides of the wrists or ankles are excellent since they contain few natural oils and cover a pulse which gently activates the scent. But if you enjoy dabbing perfume behind your ears and if, even after several hours, the scent remains pleasant (ask a good friend) there is no reason to change your habit.

Dear Rena Paul:

Some of my patients clean their faces only with cleansing cream, saying soap and water is bad for the skin. What do you think of that?

Nurses' Aide

Dear Nurse:

Dry or sensitive skin usually responds with less dryness and irritation when cleaned gently with a cream or lotion designed for that purpose. Soap and water, however, is often recommended for skin that is oily or troubled by impurities.

Dear Rena Paul:

Sometimes may nail polish chips or peels after only one day. Shouldn't it stay on at least 3 or 4 days?

Naomi S.

Dear Naomi:

Yes, it should. Reasons for early chipping or peeling could be: 1) Activities which put stress on nails, e.g. using them as tools while doing housework or gardening. 2) Polish has thickened; become contaminated with lotions or nail varnish thinner. 3) Nails were improperly prepared. They should be clean and dry, free from old nail polish, polish remover, soap, lotions, creams, etc., and cuticles must be pushed well out of the way.

Dear Rena Paul:

Can frequent air travel cause dry skin? Jim S.

Dear Jim:

Yes, indeed, because jet travel means being surrounded by air low in humidity. You'll feel more comfortable if you avoid aftershave lotion and other preparations containing alcohol.

Treu loses compensation bid

MONTREAL (CP) — Alexander Peter Treu, charged and then acquitted last year of breaking the Official Secrets Act, has lost his bid to be compensated by the federal government for court costs and lost earnings, his lawyer said Monday.

Michel Chabot said he had not seen a written report from arbitrator Lucien Tremblay, responsible for deciding on compensation for Treu.

But without revealing where he got his information, the lawyer said he had learned Treu would not be paid anything. "It was a political response," Chabot said. He would not elaborate on whether it was Tremblay or Justice Minister Jean Chretien who ultimately rejected Treu's request for $150,000 in compensation.

Under an arrangement worked out with the former Conservative government in Ottawa, Tremblay, a former chief justice of the Quebec Court of Appeal, was to recommend to the justice minister what action should be taken. But the final decision was up to the minister.

P. M. Olliver, associate deputy justice minister, confirmed in an interview from Ottawa that the arbitrator's report had been submitted to Chretien, but he refused to comment further on the case.

A spokesman for Chretien also refused comment.

Treu, a former NATO engineer, first asked for compensation when the Liberals were in power in March, 1979. That was shortly after the Quebec Court of Appeal overturned his 1978 conviction and two-year sentence for unauthorized posssession of secret NATO papers.

Treu won the appeal on evidence that although he possessed classified documents related to his work on NATO aerial defences — in technical violation of the Official Secrets Act — he had not been informed that federal authorities had withdrawn his security clearance.

When the Liberals stalled on his request for compensation, Treu threatened to take the federal government to court, saying he owed $25,000 in legal bills, needed money for his house and needed money for payments to his wife, from whom he is separated.

DREE funds funnelled into minister's riding

MATANE, Que. (UPC) — Pierre De Bane, in one of his first moves as regional economic expansion minister, announced Monday the award of an $84,200 DREE incentive to his home riding of Matapedia-Matane.

The grant, earmarked for construction of a furniture factory which would provide 23 jobs, raises to at least $6.8 million the value of federal grants awarded to the riding since De Bane was first elected in 1968.

Since July 1, 1969, DREE incentives totalling $2.9 million have been awarded to 38 manufacturing firms in the Gaspe riding. Private industry has invested more than $7 million and about 454 jobs have been created.

An additional $3.9 million in federal funds have been funnelled through other agencies to develop industries in the riding.

"Figures aren't readily available for neighboring ridings," said Robin Hilborn, a DREE official from the Montreal regional office. "However, it seems as if Quebec gets more than a fair share of DREE incentives for industry."

Radio Shack gives in after appeal bid fails

TORONTO (CP) — Radio Shack agreed Monday to comply with a comprehensive set of orders from the Ontario labor relations board intended to remedy the company's relations with the United Steelworkers of America.

The decision to comply came after the Ontario Court of Appeal denied the company's right to appeal a divisional court judgment upholding the board's orders.

Workers at Radio Shack have been on strike since last August to back demands for a first contract.

Representatives of the company and the union will meet Thursday in the presence of a mediator.

Ottawa wasting tax bite — poll

OTTAWA (CP) — A study done for an income tax preparation company says taxpayers are more critical of the value received from paying income taxes than angry or resentful at the amounts they fork out.

The report, released Monday by H and R Block (Canada) Ltd. of Toronto, says most respondents believe Canadians get poor value for taxes paid.

"Quebec residents are particularly cynical about the value received from their taxes," it said.

The survey of attitudes to the income tax system was finished last month and the results of the 1,041 at-home interviews with Canadians 18 years of age and over indicate they generally are not angry enough to stage a tax revolt such as occurred in California in 1978.

Instead, the results indicate the tax system here has "at least begrudging support" because most respondents believe controlling inflation or improving government efficiency or a reduced federal deficit are more important than lower taxes.

The study said 60 per cent thought inflation control more important, 45 per cent found better efficiency paramount and 38 per cent believed deficit curbs more important. Only 32 per cent believed lower taxes to be the most important issue.

However, they also show wide disparities in attitudes. Only 45 per cent of the participants thought the income tax system is fairer than sales or property tax.

Another peculiarity was that 31 per cent of those in the lowest income category, who pay the lowest income tax rates, "are least likely to regard income tax as the fairest system," even though other taxes are more unfair.

A sales tax hits everyone to the same degree. A property tax takes only the property's value into account and not the owner's ability to pay.

Committee urges welfare sterilization

LOVE, Sask. (CP) — Members of the Employment Services Program committee in the Village of Love are not wavering from their controversial position that some welfare recipients should be sterilized.

Committee chairman Alvin Tatlow said Monday the members remain committed to the proposal even though Social Services Minister Murray Koskie has repudiated the suggestion.

"We haven't withdrawn our stand and we may even think it should be increased to include more people because of the growing number of abortions," he said in a telephone interview.

Last month, the nine-member committee in this village of 100 people, about 100 kilometres east of Prince Albert, passed a resolution:

"There should be a compulsory birth control program for people who can't or won't look after or support their children, with possible sterilization after two children or less if they apply for welfare."

Tatlow said the committee, one of 80 in the province operating on government grants to help create local employment, "stands firm" on the proposal.

He said the committee is also annoyed that the government has not responded to its other recommendations, including that all able-bodied persons should not receive welfare if there is work anywhere in the province.

Before the judge

A 20-year-old man with 19 previous convictions was sentenced in provincial court Monday to 60 days in jail and placed on two years' probation after Judge Blake Allan said he was giving him his "very last chance."

Donald Lawrence Schneider, no fixed address, pleaded guilty Jan. 28 to two counts of breaking and entering.

Schneider and another 20-year-old, Randolph Evan Evans, 2432 Quadra, admitted breaking into Reliable Transfer, 2614 Bridge, and an Aalter Catering truck parked in front of 555 Hillside.

Evans received a suspended sentence, 12 months' probation, and 80 hours of community service work because he had no previous convictions.

Police arrived too late to catch the pair at Reliable, where they stole a tool box, but caught them 15 minutes later taking cigarettes and foodstuffs from the truck.

Court was told Evans showed officers where the tool box was hidden but Schneider remained silent and uncooperative.

Schneider's record included convictions for theft, possession of stolen property, breaking and entering, common assault, failing to appear, and breach of probation. He received sentences ranging from suspended sentences to six months in jail.

"You have a problem with dishonesty," Allan told Schneider. "It's about time you stood on your own feet."

Another man appearing on a similar offence was given a suspended sentence by Judge Lorne Pearce.

Ronald Erwin Peterson, 24, of 310 Roberts, pleaded guilty to breaking into Goodwill Enterprises for the Handicapped, 220 Bay, on March 1.

Victoria police, responding to an alarm, saw Peterson climbing out of a window and caught him after a short chase.

Peterson was convicted Oct. 13, 1971, in Lethbridge for theft and received a suspended sentence and two years' probation. On Sept. 7, 1973, also in Lethbridge, he was convicted for robbery with violence and jailed three years. On Dec. 4, 1975, it was armed robbery and breaking and entering for which he got another three years, and on April 17, 1979, in Victoria he was convicted of breaking and entering and given a five-month, consecutive sentence.

Stating that it was an "extraordinary sentence because of your record," Pearce also placed Peterson on a year's probation and ordered him to take alcohol therapy as well as psychiatric and psychological counselling as directed.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang indicated an appeal is likely.

Theft of 398 pounds of lead from his former employer resulted in a suspended sentence and one-year probation for 17-year-old Andrew Christianson, 91 Grant.

Court was told the offence involved six lead bars stolen Feb. 22. The next day the lead, valued at 55 cents a pound, was sold at a bottle depot for $99.50.

Christianson also was ordered to make restitution.

Fined $200 for impaired driving was 49-year-old John Daniel Ashcroft, 417 Gorge.

Oak Bay outfall given 90-100% success chance

A consulting engineer Monday night gave the proposed new sewage outfall in south Oak Bay a 90 to 100-per-cent chance of success.

Ray LeNoury, with the firm of Willis Cunliffe, was asked at an Oak Bay council meeting to rate the replacement for the McMicking Point outfall which has been discharging sewage on to the beach for more than 50 years.

He told aldermen the new outfall will be about 1,000 feet west at Kitty Islet.

It will be 42-inch diameter steel pipe extending 1,000 feet into Enterprise Channel discharging sewage at the 60-foot depth. There will be a comminutor, or shredder, but he didn't think a pump will be required.

LeNoury, while confident the outfall will work, said in the difficult Enterprise Channel waters there is no guarantee, and whether it works won't be known until after construction and monitoring programs record what happens.

Ald. Bob Wright of Victoria, chairman of the Capital Regional District's sewage and solid waste committee, said Oak Bay's new outfall, which will also serve part of Saanich and Victoria, will cost $1.5 to $2 million and could be finished by October.

Mayor Doug Watts said the CRD has yet to give final approval to the plans and call tenders. He said the provincial Pollution Control Board has given provisional approval but a final operating permit will depend on monitoring programs after construction.

Wright also said studies have shown the old outfall caused no environmental damage. The problem was esthetics and meeting provincial standards.

In other business, council referred to Committee A a request by owners of four houses at 2112, 2118, 2126 and 2134 Granite for rezoning to apartment-style condominiums.

Also referred to Committee A were plans by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce for premises at Oak Bay Avenue and Hampshire Road (north side). The plans showed cedar exterior with brick columns and shake roof.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale, start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

309 IN MEMORIAM

God saw the road was getting rough and the hills were hard to climb, so he closed your weary eyelids, and whispered Peace Be Thine.
One year has passed since that sad day,
when the one we loved was called away.
God took him home. It was his will.
Within our hearts he liveth still.

Buddleia: a garden favorite gardening

jack beastall

The genus Buddleia contains flowering plants which become favorites for home gardeners who know them.

As with the genus Hydrangea the common forms are widely grown to the exclusion of the better forms and colors.

Buddleia was named to honor a Rev. Adam Buddle, one time vicar of Farnbridge, Essex (England), most likely an ardent gardener as so many clergymen were in his day.

In some garden encyclopedias the name of the genus is spelled Buddleja, the original spelling used by Linnaeus, but the "i" and the "j" have the same phonetic value. The pronunciation is Bud-lee-ah.

Although around sixteen different species are known to be cultivated in North America, those grown locally are Buddleia globosa, B. alternifolia, occasionally B. nanoensis, and the best known which is B. Davidi (variabilis), the Butterfly-bush.

These are shrubs varying in height from two to six metres, an exception being B. nanoensis which reaches a little over one metre. Growth is loose and informal, to some gardeners unattractive, but this can be changed by proper pruning.

To increase the length of the flower panicles and produce an outstanding display which can last over a period of six weeks, regular pruning, sometimes severe, must be practised.

Pruning time varies with species. Those which flower in late spring (June) are pruned after flowering; the late summer and fall flowering are pruned in March and should be done right away.

These are the Buddleia Davidi (variabilis) group which includes the varieties magnifica, nanoensis, superba, Veitchiana and Wilsoni, and a host of horticultural names such as Empire Blue, White Bouquet, Ile de France, Royal Red, White Profusion, to name a few found in local gardens.

This group will make new growths to two metres in length during spring and early summer, then produce large tip panicles of bloom followed by small panicles from the axils of the leaves.

Looking over the plants now in the garden we find short green growths on the stems which have persisted over winter. We can now prune all stems to leave two of these growths at the base from which the flowering shoots will come this season.

Overgrown shrubs can be cut down severely to the very low side growths to make smaller plants. Although the number of flowering shoots will be less this year, a large display will follow pruning next year.

The first buddleia to flower is B. globosa, a plant from Chile, rarely recognized as a buddleia when its small balls of bright yellow flowers, arranged on opposite stems which alternate in position to form the flower head, appear in April.

This buddleia flowers on last year's growths and needs but little pruning of the old wood after the flowers fade unless it has gone too high or spread too wide.

If this is the case it can be pruned severely after flowering, sacrificing next year's flowers. Pruning is done in late April to early May according to the exact time of flowering.

Buddleia alternifolia (leaves opposite) is a loose shrub which flowers in June on the previous year's growth, the flowers close to the long, semi-drooping, slender stems.

Branches are shortened a litte after flowering and older shrubs benefit by having the underneath branches removed.

All buddleias like a well-composted loamy soil and are easily increased by cuttings taken in late summer.

Czechs rough with Canadian

By JANE O Hara
FP News Service

LONDON — A Canadian philosopher, Dr. William Newton-Smith, was manhandled, arrested and deported over the weekend, after Czechoslovakian secret police raided a clandestine lecture he was delivering to a group of intellectual dissidents in Prague.

His offence? Giving a talk without permission.

"I knew I was in for trouble when they took my passport and grabbed me under the arms", said Newton-Smith 36, of Orillia, who is on sabbatical from Oxford University, where he was the senior tutor at Balliol College.

"I asked them why they were arresting me and they said we'll explain when we get to the station."

The raid took place in a small flat in Prague, where a group of 30 Czech students regularly meet under the Dr. Julius Tomin, a renowned Czech philosopher. Tomin, who has been harrassed and ostracized by the Czech authorities, is the driving force behind the Patocka or the Parallel University in Prague, which for the past two years has been inviting Western academics to lecture at private meetings.

Newton-Smith's talk on the rationality of science, was disrupted after 15 minutes when the doorbell rang and two plainsclothes police and 12 uniformed officers barged into the small apartment.

Newton-Smith was taken to the headquarters of the secret police, where he was interrogated for close to three hours. He was refused permission to call either the Canadian exmbassy or Oxford University.

He was warned that if he tried to visit, phone or write to Tomin, the Czech dissident would get "into serious trouble." He was informed that his visa had been cancelled and that he would be deported, "for giving a lecture without the permission of the authorities."

He was then driven to the German border and released.

UVic law students win again

For the second time in three years University of Victoria law students have won a moot court competition for law schools in Western Canada.

Tom Manson, of Vancouver and Leslie Jamieson of St. John's Nfld., were chosen to represent UVic following a series of earlier mock trials.

They brought home the Malcolm McIntyre trophy following the competition last weekend at the University of Saskatchewan.

Moot court is an exercise to give students an opportunity to practise courtroom techniques.

Teams from University of Calgary, University of British Columbia, University of Saskatchewan, University of Manitoba and UVic took part.

Faculty advisers for the UVic team were Professor Hamar Foster and lawyer John Horn, practioner-in-residence in the faculty of law for 1979-80.

Next year the competition, which has been held since 1965, will take place in Victoria in the new faculty of law building now under construction.

Scientologists to be extradited

LONDON (AP) — Two members of the Church of Scientology, Jane Kember and Morrison Budlong, will be extradited Thursday to the United States where they face legal action, Britain's home office said Monday.

The decision Monday means British-born Mrs. Kember and Budlong, an American, lost their appeals to Home Secretary William Whitelaw against extradition proceedings.

Opening lead — jack of hearts.

Some hands practically play themselves. You start with a firm number of tricks and finish with exactly that number because there is nothing you can do to increase them. In other hands the number of tricks you can take is far from certain at the start.

The outcome may depend on how the opponents' cards are divided, or on how you choose to play the hand. These deals are generally more interesting to play than the so-called pat hands.

Take this case where East-West cash two hearts and East then plays a club. Superficially, it seems that declarer must lose two club tricks and go down one, but actually he can make the contract.

He should try to establish dummy's fifth diamond for his tenth trick. He should win East's club return with the ace, play a diamond to the ace, and ruff a diamond.

Declarer requires three further entries to dummy to utilize the extra diamond trick he is trying to establish, so he plays a low trump and finesses the seven! When the finesse succeeds, South ruffs another diamond high and re-enters dummy with a trump to ruff the fourth round of diamonds.

Declarer's efforts have now finally paid off. The nine of diamonds is a trick and the nine of spades is the entry to dummy that permits him to discard one of his club losers on it.

Note the importance of the trump finesse, without which the contract cannot be made. It is better to finesse against the ten than play to drop a singleton ten from East. This is because West will be dealt the 10-5-2, or 10-5, or 10-2 of spades about three times as often as he will be dealt specifically the 5-2 of the suit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Dance to your own tune. Cycle high and you are strong despite those who attempt to undercut you. Define aspirations, see people as they are and not merely as you perceive them in fantasy world. You get a very special invitation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone may be trying to 'put squeeze' on you. Take time to re-examine procedures, aspirations and organizational duties. Cancer, Capricorn persons play key roles. Emphasis on what occurs behind scenes, special communication from one who is temporarily confined.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Wish comes true if willing to be rid of unnecessary burden. Time has come to push aside 'security blanket.' A major project can be completed. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently. Love will no longer be a stranger.

IF MARCH 12th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are perceptive, versatile, artistic and tend to scatter your forces. At times you bend over backwards to let others express their views. Many persons feel they can take advantage of your open-mindedness. In actuality, you know exactly what you are doing and you make mental notes concerning ingrates. Gemini, Sagittarius persons play important roles in your life. In 1980, major domestic adjustment is due and this could include a change of residence and lifestyle. In April, you find outlet for creative capabilities. You also make fresh contacts and could fall madly in love.

It's farewell to the Maggie

Gov't won't budge, Elworthy fired

By MIKE HUGHES

The long-running saga of the Maggie came to a crunching conclusion today.

The fate of the Princess Marguerite was sealed as Arthur Elworthy was fired as president of the B.C. Steamship Co. Ltd., and the government reiterated the ferry will definitely not sail this summer.

In dumping the Marguerite once and for all, the government also rejected a petition with more than 39,000 names of people who asked that she be refitted to sail again this summer.

Elworthy emerged from a meeting at the Empress Hotel of the company's board of directors to say he was no longer wanted.

"I wasn't re-elected to the board," he said.

Asked how he viewed the decision, he replied:

"It's fine because it will be impossible to operate the Queen of Prince Rupert and I wouldn't want to be responsible for operating it."

Over the past two weeks, Elworthy has complained about the decision to replace the Marguerite on the summer run to Seattle with the smaller Queen of Prince Rupert.

He has also accused the government repeatedly of trying to violate his company's autonomy.

Another board member, Orval Cook, also resigned from the board after being reappointed at the meeting.

He said he quit because he didn't agree with the policy to cancel the Marguerite.

Also attending the meeting were Transport Minister Alex Fraser, Industry Minister Don Phillips and Victoria alderman Bob Wright.

Phillips said following the meeting that Fraser will be the new president of the B.C. Steamship Co. and David Price now with Tourism B.C.'s office in Seattle and formerly with the B.C. Ferry Corp. will be acting general manager.

Elworthy had previously held both positions.

Phillips refused to comment on Elworthy's firing, saying a press release was being prepared for later today.

As to the future of the Victoria-Seattle ferry operation, Phillips said that would be up to the new board of directors, including any decisions on auxiliary service.

In defence of the government's move to replace the Marguerite, Phillips said it was a question of safety.

Huge gold theft

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Gold and jewelry worth between $7 million and $8 million was taken from a Miami jewelry store during the weekend, an insurance investigator says.

He said the store's owner also owns the company that suffered the loss last month of a $790,000 consignment of precious-metal bound for Canada.

Richard Andrews, insurance investigator for The Jewelers' Mutual Co., called the latest disappearance the largest single gold theft in history. Miami police and FBI spokesmen had no comment on his claim.

"We're trying to get the (insurance) investigators to talk to us," said Miami Officer Al Dominguez. "We ourselves don't know what's really going on."

Police said the store owner reported the burglary Sunday.

Andrews said 800 pounds of gold and "literally thousands" of ring mountings, bracelets and other jewelry were taken from Trendline Jewelry during the weekend theft.

"They got the mother lode in this one," Andrews said. "I've never seen or heard about a bigger gold theft anywhere."

Plan to float prime rate branded 'subterfuge'

Times News Services

TORONTO — The Bank of Canada's decision to float its trend-setting bank rate came under immediate fire from economists and opposition critics today.

Many economists believe the decision is an attempt to blur responsibility for rising interest rates.

Douglas Peters, vice-president and chief economist of the Toronto Dominion Bank, said in an interview the bank's move is a "subterfuge" and another method of increasing rates.

Governor Gerald Bouey announced Monday the Bank of Canada will switch to a floating standard for its bank rate effective Thursday, whereby the rate will be fixed on each successive Thursday at one-quarter of one per cent more than the weekly rate established earlier that day for 91-day treasury bills.

The treasury bill rate has fluctuated in the range of 13.5 per cent and 13.75 per cent since early October.

"A floating rate does not mean a 'hands off' policy," Bouey said Monday.

"The Bank will continue to play an important role in the determination of short-term interest rates through its open-market operations and its management of the reserves of the banking system."

"But what does it mean?" said TD's Peters. "Little or nothing.

"It means bank rate changes will appear weekly on page 63 in your newspaper, instead of on page one every three weeks."

Montreal economist Dian Cohen said, "It means the government got itself out of the forecasting business.

"It takes the interest rate out of the political sphere.

"Maybe it means the Depression is here," she added. "The Americans are in miserable shape.

"In the next two weeks, watch for the bank rate to creep up closer to the 17 per cent in the U.S."

The Bank of Canada's rate is a record 14 per cent and chartered banks' prime rate to their most credit-worthy customers is 15 per cent. Banks in the U.S. are charging a prime rate of 17.75 per cent.

Opposition finance critics were hot off the mark in their criticism of the Bank of Canada decision.

"If the government thinks this means it can avoid responsibility for high interest rates, it's sadly mistaken," said New Democratic Party MP Bob Rae, his party's finance critic in the last Parliament.

Former Treasury Board president Sinclair Stevens called the move deceptive because it allows the new Liberal government to permit interest rates to rise without any political embarrassment.

"It's a neat, deceptive move," he said in a telephone interview from Toronto.

Stevens said the move was "a throwback" to one introduced in 1956 by the Liberals, "those masters of deception," which also followed an unpopular bank rate increase.

In defence of the bank's move, Finance Minister Allan MacEachen said today the new floating rate is not an attempt by the government to switch its responsibility for interest

City jobless rate tops 10%

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Victoria's unemployment rate rose by more than a full percentage point in February, bucking a trend set by the rest of B.C.

The seasonally-adjusted rate for the Victoria area reached 10.1 per cent, up 1.5 per cent from January, Statistics Canada reported today.

In the rest of British Columbia, the jobless rate dropped to 7.3 per cent down from a January high of 8.0.

Across the country, the number of persons unable to find work increased for the fifth month in a row to 949,000 in February, up from 946,000 the previous month.

But the number of unemployed is still below the level of 954,000 a year earlier.

The agency said the unemployment rate, adjusted for seasonal variations, was 7.4 per cent, the same as the January rate but below the rate of 7.8 in February, 1979.

The total labor force — which includes those working as well as those seeking work — rose in February to 11.18 million, a 3.4-per-cent increase from 10.81 million a year earlier.

Newfoundland continued to have the highest seasonally-adjusted jobless rate of 14.4 per cent, but it fell from 14.6 per cent a month earlier.

The biggest increase in the unemployment rate occurred in Manitoba where it climbed to 5.8 per cent last month from 4.8 per cent in January.

In Quebec, the rate increased to 9.8 per cent from 9.3 per cent and in both Saskatchewan and Alberta, the rate rose to 3.9 per cent from 3.8 per cent.

Economists and government officials have predicted higher national employment this year of eight per cent or more as the United States is expected to head for a recession, cutting demand for Canadian goods and the jobs needed to supply them.

Wee reprieve for Glenshiel?

The Glenshiel Hotel will be torn down and the land used as a government parking lot no matter how many protest signs the 60 elderly residents hang out of their windows.

However, Transport Minister Alex Fraser, the minister responsible for the building, says the two-year phase-out period might be extended if necessary.

"We're not going to stick to the actual 24 months, if it's going to cause problems. If they need 30 months they can have it," Fraser said Monday after meeting with a Glenshiel delegation.

It would cost more to repair the building than it is worth, Fraser said.

The B.C. Building Corp. estimates necessary repairs at $536,000 while evaluating the hotel at $420,000.

Victoria NDP MLA Gordon Hanson wrote to Fraser Monday suggesting he transfer responsibility for the old hotel to the health ministry which could maintain it as a residence for seniors.

"It is difficult to understand what planning mechanisms are in place in your government when the ministry cannot meet the needs of extended and long-term care beds for Victoria while your ministry will be doing away with 85 beds for seniors," Hanson stated in his letter.

Widow's tumble costs $9M

NEW YORK (AP) — A Brooklyn widow who slipped on a patch of candle wax in a darkened staircase and suffered permanent back and leg injuries after Consolidated Edison Co. blacked out her building has been awarded a record $9 million in punitive damages.

Con Ed supervisors testified at the trial that on May 9, 1975, they impersonated elevator repairmen to get into the 18-storey building to turn off the electricity because of alleged nonpayment of the electric bill. The action deprived 157 tenants of electric power, darkened hallways and staircases and stopped water pumps and elevators.

Mrs. Hall set about calming residents. She was walking an octogenarian couple down the stairs when she slipped on some wax from candles that residents were using to light their way.

UN commission leaves Iran

Times News Services

TEHRAN — The UN investigating commission ended its 17-day mission today and left Tehran, thwarted in its attempt to talk with American hostages who Ayatollah Khomeini said could not be freed before May.

The five-member commission said it was "imperative that it confer" with UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim before pursuing its mission further in an effort to win release of the 50 hostages, now in their 129th day of captivity.

In Washington, White House officials reacted bitterly to this new setback, accusing the Iranian government of Iran of failing to keep its promises to the commission, and hinting the Carter administration would return to a tougher line of confrontation with Iran as a result of this week's events.

However, both Waldheim and White House officials were careful to leave the door open to a possible resumption of the UN commission's work, if there were a change in policy or power relationships in Iran.

U.S. congressional leaders, following a 40-minute briefing by President Carter and other senior officials, emerged from the White House counselling patience and declining to state a definite view of their own about any alternate U.S. policy.

Iran has hoped for official UN recognition of its grievances, but this was to be made public in exchange for yet unfulfilled concessions regarding the American hostages.

In a related development, it was announced today that Iran's deposed Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi needs emergency surgery, but Carter administration officials had ruled out his return to the United States for hospital care.

He reportedly will be admitted to a U.S. military hospital in Panama because his health is failing and he is suffering from an abnormally enlarged spleen requiring immediate medical attention.

Iran's Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh said he was "very disappointed" at the commission's departure but said it would return to Iran to "fulfill their mission as soon as the situation is reformed."

A-G refuses full Vogel inquiry

Former attorney-general Garde Gardom and his successor Allan Williams have rejected an NDP call for a full public inquiry into the Vogel affair.

Gardom and Williams on Monday reiterated their respect for the integrity of deputy attorney-general Richard Vogel, who was placed on leave of absence Friday while allegations of interference with court cases are reviewed.

The review is being carried out by Williams himself, and he indicated Monday the job may take until the end of this week, possibly longer.

Gardom said associate deputy attorney-general Neil McDiarmid investigated a complaint and found Vogel had made an "error in judgment" in one case.

The error: "He stayed an appeal under circumstances in which the appeal probably could have gone ahead."

Gardom offered no suggestion as to why Vogel did it.

"Ask Mr. Vogel."

Nor would he suggest what motive McDiarmid uncovered for Vogel's error.

"Ask Mr. McDiarmid."

Gardom was asked if it was right that McDiarmid be given the job of investigating his own boss.

"That occurred to me at the time," he admitted. "The reason I picked Mr. McDiarmid was for the simple reason that he was the senior man and without question the best equipped and trained to look into the matter."

The man who had the job of attorney-general before Gardom, NDP MLA Alex Macdonald, said the people of B.C. are not content with the answers Gardom and Williams have been giving.

"We cannot be satisfied by an in-house investigation."

He called for a full, public inquiry by a B.C. Supreme Court justice "because there is a public interest in seeing there is no favoritism in the justice system."

The NDP peppered Williams and Gardom with questions in the legislature. They particularly probed the decision by McDiarmid not to lay influence-peddling charges against Socred MLA Bill Ritchie, despite RCMP and Crown counsel recommendations that charges be laid.

Williams said the decision was correct.

Macdonald asked how the minister could say that when he admits he saw neither the RCMP recommendations nor the report from Crown counsel.

Macdonald, meanwhile, has been under attack from judge Les Bewley for allegedly showing partiality in a murder case when he was attorney-general.

Macdonald denied it. He said he ordered a second hearing in the case to make sure it was handled properly.

He suggested Bewley's remarks might be slanderous.

Rhodesia's change pressures S. Africa

By CYNTHIA STEVENS

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Robert Mugabe's sweeping electoral victory in neighboring Rhodesia put pressure on South Africa's white-ruled government to improve conditions for its black masses, and changes may be in store.

South African Prime Minister P. W. Botha already has called for a multi-racial constitutional conference, the first of its kind in the country, and others are saying the Pretoria government needs to make greater concessions if it hopes to avoid a violent uprising among black population.

Major newspapers and opposition leaders have called on Botha to negotiate radical black leaders' demands for political rights and economic improvements, and some black leaders have called for the release from prison of black political activists.

Although Botha's call for the multi-racial meeting was his strongest overture yet to the non-white community, the prime minister has made it clear he does not envisage one-man, one-vote rule. Such a system, he said, would not guarantee the rights of minority groups, including the ruling whites, and would lead to confrontation, power struggles and eventual dictatorship.

Thus, although Botha said recently all South African racial groups are standing "shoulder-to-shoulder" to defend the country against Marxism, few observers believe his comments will end blacks' unhappiness with the ruling Nationalist party or the apartheid policy it has enforced for the last 30 years.

Under the system of apartheid, the 19 million blacks cannot vote or own land and must live in their own neighborhoods. The system does not allow for integregated public toilets, buses or restaurants, though that is beginning to change in some parts of the country.

Apparently with potential black unrest in mind, Botha warned after black nationalist Mugabe's victory was announced last Tuesday that an independent Rhodesia, which will become Zimbabwe, "will have to face the full force of the republic's strength" if it harbors guerrillas seeking to overthrow the South African government.

The statement typified the alarm Marxist Mugabe's victory caused among South Africa's white population.

In the minds of many South Africans, black and white, the victory of the former guerrilla leader raised the possibility that a black "liberation" movement in South Africa could succeed in the same way such black movements have prevailed in Angola, Mozambique and Rhodesia.

Since his election, Mugabe, who has his hands full trying to create a government of national unity and to rebuild Rhodesia after seven years of war, has pledged a non-aligned foreign policy and non-interference in South African affairs.

He said during the weekend that he does not not favor providing military assistance or facilities for black nationalists hoping to use Zimbabwe as a base to fight South Africa's white supremacist policies, and he even said he wants to "deepen and expand" trade relations between the two neighboring countries.

But he warned of the situation in South Africa: "If you continue to oppress people and these people become disgruntled, next you will have an armed struggle. South Africa should act swiftly to prevent the armed struggle by bringing about democratic change."

Restaurants hit in formula fight

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — A coalition of 450 groups which claims Nestle infant formula may lead to malnutrition among babies in developing countries, has extended its boycott of Nestle-owned companies to two restaurant chains.

The National Infant Formula Action Coalition (INFACT) has called for a boycott against the Nestle subsidiaries Stouffer Hotel and Restaurant chain and Rusty Scupper Restaurants after a weekend conference.

"It is crucial that we increase the public pressure on Nestle to modify its practices, and the Stouffer campaign represents a way of making a clear-cut economic impact on the company," INFACT national chairman Douglas Johnson said.

INFACT has led a boycott of Nestle products since 1977 to protest the promotion of infant forumlas in developing countries "where environmental and economic factors make safe formula preparation virtually impossible," he said.

The coalition also contends that Nestle advertises the product in a way which discourages mothers from breastfeeding.

Nestle has denied this, calling the boycott a "witch-hunt."

The coalition includes religious, student and community organizations and health professionals, such as Dr. Benjamin Spock, an authority on baby care.

Thatcher aims worry party

By SHARRI BARRON

LONDON (CP) — The Thatcher revolution seems to be nearing the end of its first rush of enthusiasm.

But despite the growing disquiet from economists, businessmen, unions and members of the Tory cabinet over stringent government policy, there is no sign of any major change in the government's long term monetarist strategy.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher seems to be preparing Britons for the bitter pill of the next Tory budget due March 26. Experts say it will offer no relief through income tax cuts but will again stress monetary restraint and try to control public spending.

The last budget reduced the basic rate of income tax from 33 per cent to 30 per cent and increased indirect taxation from eight per cent to 15 per cent.

Delivering the first Airey Neave memorial lecture earlier this week in words economists immediately likened to the school of modern Chicago monetarist Milton Friedman, Thatcher reiterated the party's basic philosophy:

"Facing our national problems entails above all, keeping the growth in the amount of money in line with the growth in the amount of goods and services. Economics means harnessing change instead of being dominated by it.

"After years of printing too much money this will take time, but it must be done."

She listed what she said were five illusions Britain must dispel: that government can be a universal provider and yet society can stay free and prosperous; that government can print money and yet the nation can still have sound money; that the link can be broken between reward and effort and still get the effort; that every loss can be covered by a subsidy and that basic economic law can be suspended for the British.

A majority of leading economic forecasters warn the government against cutting taxes in the budget or making any other attempt to expand the economy despite gloomy forecats of sharp recession over the next two years.

Some economic projections released earlier this week predict Britain's inflation rate will still be well into double figures in two years time and unemployment close to two million.

But economist Milton Friedman said in a Times article this week:

"A deliberate acceleration of monetary growth may reduce unemployment temporarily, but only at the cost of still higher unemployment later.

"Reduced monetary growth, such as Mrs. Thatcher's government is trying to achieve, may increase unemployment temporarily, to be rewarded by a much sharper reduction in unemployment later."

Concerned Tory ministers and MPs say current government policy may not produce demonstrable results in time to support the Conservative government's next appeal to the electorate in the next four years.

"It's bound to take time," Thatcher says. But anxious colleagues are wondering if the electorate is willing to wait.

Seal hunt 'dehumanizes'

WASHINGTON (CP) — The Humane Society of the United States has asked Canada to call off the harp seal hunt, or at least substantially reduce the quota of animals to be killed.

"Notwithstanding attempts by representatives of the Canadian government to paint the hunt as humane and as a conservation program, we hold firm to the obvious conclusion that it is neither," society president John Hoyt says in a letter to Prime Minister Trudeau.

"Clubbing seals to death dehumanizes men," the head of the 120,000-member organization says. "Surely, we can eliminate this bit of cruelty from our lives."

Hoyt's letter expresses concern about the size of the quota — 180,000 animals again this year. He notes that a draft study commissioned by a U.S. agency suggests this may be too high a quota for the herd.

He also asks for Canada's help in stopping another hunt, the kill of 28,000 North Pacific fur seals on the Pribilov Islands off Alaska each year.

Although Canada does not participate directly in the hunt, it received 15 per cent of the pelts under a four-country convention on the seals. Hoyt asks Canada to consider working with the U.S. to renegotiate the convention.

"If that is not possible, at the least Canada could forego its share of 15 per cent, thereby reducing the kill by the same amount," he said.

The society has asked the U.S. to do the same with its 70-per-cent share of the hunt.

Pakistan coup foiled

United Press International

Pakistan President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq has crushed an attempted coup and arrested 26 top army officers involved, reports reaching the West said today.

There was contradiction among the reports as to precisely who was detained and how strong the challenge was to Zia, but different sources agreed that "something did happen."

One report said the deputy chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Mohammed Iqbal, was among those arrested. His post put him at the right hand of Zia, who is the country's army chief of staff. Another source disputed the arrest report.

The leader of the coup attempt was a retired infantry officer, Maj. Gen. Tajmal Hussian Malik, who was held in the central prison in Lahore, according to one set of sources.

The other army officers were in various jails throughout Pakistan, the sources said.

The officers were arrested last Tuesday and Wednesday when Zia, apparently warned of a festering revolt within the army hierarchy, moved swiftly to stop the coup.

The army officers had openly expressed dissatisfaction with Zia's continued rule as head of the martial law administration that has run Pakistan since July 1977.

Patty Hearst appeals

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — Newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst Shaw asked an appeals court Monday to overturn her armed robbery conviction, arguing that her lawyer, F. Lee Bailey, had been involved in a conflict of interest.

Mrs. Shaw, now the wife of San Francisco policeman Bernard Shaw, was kidnapped by the Symbionese Liberation Army terrorist group in February, 1974.

While held captive, she declared herself a revolutionary member of the group. Following her arrest 18 months after she was kidnapped, she was sentenced to seven years imprisonment for taking part in an armed bank robbery with her abductors. She had served 22 months of her sentence when President Carter ordered her release last year.

MacEachen, however, would not speculate on the movement of the treasury bill rate during the next weekly auction Thursday.

"I think we'll have to wait until the announcement of the auction," he told reporters following a Liberal caucus meeting.

Asked what the upper limit for the bank rate would be, he said: "That's a hypothetical question and I don't intend to answer it."

When asked whether the interest rate would be permitted to go as high as the market will bear, he said: "That's your conclusion. I'm not going to pronounce on upper or lower limits under this system."

Although the prospect of higher interest rates is usually a depresant for stock market, the Toronto Stock Exchange did an abrupt about-turn this morning, swinging sharply higher in the first two hours of trading after a record drop Monday.

By mid-afternoon the TSE index of 300 selected stocks climbed 30.31 points to 2004.90.

The composite index had plunged an unprecedented 71.12 points Monday, bringing the paper loss for the last three days to a whopping $11.9 billion.

The oil and gas stock group, which had dropped a record 267.17 points Monday, led the advances this morning, jumping 204.27 points to 4558.54.

News of the floating rate didn't appear to harm the dollar either.

New York's money market closed with the Canadian dollar pegged at $0.85.89 U.S., a rise of 13/50ths.

"It is not going to be on my conscience to send babies and tourists on a vessel which is a disaster waiting to happen."

He said because of the age of the ship there is also a potential for breakdown.

The minister said when the government is responsible for the safety of a vessel there can be no room for doubt.

He said the vessel does not comply with 1979 safety standards.

Elworthy admitted he was "hoisted on my own petard" in his attempts to get the bigger and faster Queen of Surrey to replace the Marguerite. At one stage, he had threatened to resign if the Marguerite ran again this year.

In making a case for the Surrey to sail to Seattle, Elworthy had made the Marguerite out to be an unsafe vessel.

He said today he wanted the Surrey on the run was that he estimated it would save the B.C. Steamship Co. $1.2 million in fuel, wages and other costs.

Elworthy said he made his position clear at the last board meeting when he expressed his concern that the taxpayers' money was being wasted on the Marguerite.

He added that he didn't make a case for the 32-year-old steamship at today's meeting because he felt there was no point, that all the decisions had already been made.

Phillips, when asked about Victoria tourist operators' concerns that the Prince Rupert can only bring in half as many people as the Marguerite, said that in comparison to the people brought in by the B.C. Ferry Corp. those using the Victoria-Seattle ferry are "just a drop in the bucket."

Herring harvest 'bleak'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The strike-bound roe herring industry, worth $120 million last year, has netted co-op and non-union fishermen only about $7 million so far this season.

Federal fisheries spokesmen said that by noon Monday, only 9,653 tons had been landed.

"It looks pretty bleak," said a fisheries spokesman. "We're only up to one-third of the projected take.

"The season will probably carry through for a week or so in the southern section. Then it moves up north where we only projected 5,000 tons."

During the strike by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and the Native Brotherhood of B.C., plants which have continued to process fish have been picketed and picket boats have tried to persuade non-union fishermen from continuing to harvest the fish.

Court injunctions restricting pickets have been issued for plants at Delta, south of here, and at Victoria and Nanaimo on Vancouver Island.

A surplus of roe from last year, caused by high prices and consumer resistance in Japan, was a factor in prices offered the strikers by the Fisheries Association of B.C. which negotiates for 13 major processors.

The UFAWU and Brotherhood originally sought $1,400 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $850 a ton for seine-caught herring. The fishermen have come down to $1,030 and $630, respectively.

The Fisheries Association's best offer was $650 a ton for gillnet-caught herring and $350 for seine.

When independent processors tried to get some movement in the dispute, the fishermen rejected their offer of $745 and $400 on Sunday night.

The Fisheries Association says it has given up on 1980 because too much of the season has gone.

McKenzie interchange still in picture: Fraser

An interchange is included in the second phase of the $7 million McKenzie Avenue extension project, according to Highways Minister Alex Fraser.

The interchange will not be built right away, Fraser said in a letter Monday to Saanich acting mayor Ald. Mary Casilio.

Council heard unofficially from a government source several weeks ago plans for the interchange at McKenzie and Pat Bay Highway had been shelved.

The interchange was considered an important part of the four-laning of McKenzie.

Fraser says in his letter properties purchased by his ministry near the intersection are for road widening, not for the interchange.

The interchange will be built at a later date, the letter says.

Saanich may have received the wrong impression from a preliminary plan given to the municipal staff last year which showed proposed right-of-way requirements for the interchange.

The plan was withdrawn because the ministry is taking a second look at its impact on neighboring properties. A new plan will be shown to Saanich later this year, Fraser said.
